

THE

R E V O L U T I O N

 0 F
A M E R I C A．

 B YTHEABBÉRAYNAI，

АUTHOR OF THE PHILOSOPHICAT，AND POLITICAT HISTORY OF THE ESTALKISUMENTS AND COM－ MERCEOFTHEEUROPEANSIN UOT゙ITIEXNDIFS。

$$
\mathrm{L} O \mathrm{~N} D \mathrm{O} \mathrm{~N}:
$$

PRINTED FOR LOCKIER DASIS，HOLBORN゙。 MDCCLXXXI．

A DVERTISEMENT,

 BY THE TRANSLATOR.The Philofophical and Political Hiftory of the Eftablifhments and Commerce of the Europeans, in both the Indies, by the Abbe Raynal, is certainly one of the finct works which have appeared fince the revival of letters; and perhaps the moft inftuctive of any which have been known. It is an original as to its formation; and ought to ferve henceforward for a model. An additional part to this work, difcuffing the difputes of Great Britain with her Colonics, has been long and ardently expected. In the courfi of his travels, the tranflator happily fucceeded in obtaining a copy of this exquinte little piece, which A 2 has

[ iv ]

has not yet made its appearance from any prefs. He publifhes a French edition, in favour of thofe who will feel its eloquenê reafoning more forcibly in its native language, at the fame time with the following tranflation of it ; in which he has been defirous, perhaps in vain, that all the warmth, the grace, the ftrength, the dignity of the original, fhould not be loft. And he flatters himfelf, that the indulgence of the illuftrious hiftorian will not be wanting to a man, who, of his own mution, has taken the liberty to give this compofition to the public, only from a ftrong perfuafion, that its momentous argument will be ufeful, in a critical conjuncture, to that country which he loves with

$$
\left[\begin{array}{ll}
\mathrm{v} & ]
\end{array}\right.
$$

with an ardour, that can be exceeded only by the nobler flame, which burns in the bofom of the philanthropic author, for the freedom and happinefs of all the countries upon earth.

It may not, perhaps, be quite needlefs to obferve, tho' it ought to be underftood, that the valuation of fums, made in the original in foreign money, is, in the tranflation, made in fterling. The abundant good fenfe, the political fagacity, and even the falutary farcafm, to be found, amidit the effufions of benevolence, in this hiftorical traet, could never, it is apprehended, be more opportunely laid before thofe whom it may concern, than now. It now feems to be the general and anxious expectation, that, beA 3 fore

$$
[\text { vi }]
$$

fore the rifing of Parliament from its prefent feffion, fome proper and efficacious fteps will at laft, at this high time, be thought of, towards clofing the unnatural, the fhameful, and diftrefsful breach, between the mother-country and her colonies; a breach in which, as it is obferved, with great truth, by the author of a Plan of Accommodation*, founded in juftice and liberality, "The people on both " fides are robbed of their trueft "6 interefts, and made to facrifice " their mutual happinefs, to gain " nothing but contempt and mi" fery."

Let not Wifdom utter her roice in the ftreets, and no man regard her.

$$
\text { lrinted in } 1780
$$

[ vii ]

The Tranflator cannot help moft folicitounly withing that fome of his fellow-fubjects, of the Britifh dominions, may enter the lifts for the prize propofed in the following Advertifement from the Academy of Lyons, in the hope that he flall have the happinefs to fee it borne from the reft of the lettered world, by a hero of that people, who have been dear, tam Marti quàm Mercurio, who are yet diftinguifhed for their eloquence, and who, he trufts, when fraternal feuds fhall be reconciled, will vindicate their fuperiority in arms. He humbly offers his fervice to any candidate for this prize, productive of fo great celebrity, who may not know the ready means

$$
\text { A } 4 \quad \text { of }
$$

[ viii ]

of doing it himfelf, to get his performance conveyed to Lyons, free of poftage, provided that it be left with his Bookfeller, Mr. Lockyer Davis, before the firft of December, 1782.

London, March 5, 1781.

[ ix ]

ADVERTISEMENT
FROM

THE ACADEMY

OF SCIENCES, POLITE LITERATURF, AND ARTS, AT LYONS.

T
HE Abbe Raynal, after having inftructed mankind by his writings, would ftill contribute to the improvement of their knowledge, by exciting emulation. An Affociate in the labours of the Academy of Lyons, he propofed to it to give out two fubjects for prizes, of which he has conftituted the fund, to be diftributed by the Academy, to the authors whom

[ x ]

whom it fhall judge to have beft anfwered the views of the propounded queftions.

The Academy accepted of the offer with gratitude, and publifhes the fubjects without delay.

The firl fubject propofed for the year 1732 , relating exclusively to the manufactures and pro/perity of the city of Lyons, is omitted bere, as, bowever judicious and patriotic in the founder of the prize, it is an object only of particular concern, and, consequently, not interefing, like the fecond, to the world at large.

FOR

$$
[\mathrm{xi}]
$$

FOR THE YEAR 17 SOB. $^{\circ}$.

The Academy propofes the following fubject.

Has the difcovery of America been ufeful or burtful to mankind?

If adwantages bave refulted from it, what are the means to preferve and increafe them?

If dijadrantages, what are the means to remedy them?

The prize confifts of the fum of fifty Louis d'or, which will be remitted to the fucceffful author, or his affigns.
CONDITIONS.

Any perfon of any nation may be a competitor for this prize, except titulary and veteran academicians. The affociates of academies will be admitted. The authors [ xii ]
thors muft not let themfelves be known, directly or indirectly ; they will put fome line, or motto, at the head of their performance, which will be accompanied by a note fealed up, containing the fame line, or motto, with their names and places of abode.

The Academy, confidering the importance of the fubject, fets no limits to the length of the compofition, but only wifhes the author to write in French or Latin.

No work can be admitted aftcr the firft of February, I783. The Academy will proclaim the prize the fame year, in it's public affembly, after St. Lewis's day, or the 25 th of Auguft.

The packets are to be fent to Lyons, free of portage, directed to M. LA

[ xiii ]

M. La Tourrette, Secretaire perpétuel pour la claje des Sciences, Rue Boifac; or to
M. de Bory, Secretaire perpétuel pour la claffe des Belles-Lettres, Rue Boiflac ; or to
M. Aiméde la Roche, Impri-meur-Libraire de l'Académie, màfon des balles de la Grenette.

Signed,

La Tourrette,Perpetual Secretary.

Lyons, Sept.5, 1780.

The Reader is entreated to correct the following errors of the prefs, and to pardon fome inaccuracies and gallicirms, occafioned by the well-meaning zeal, which hurried the tranीator to give this piece to his country with all poffible defpatch.

Page Line

13.-I. for happy people, read happinefs of the people.
54.-6. for whom, read which.
84.-8. for Form pleas, read Form plans. 89.-20. for began, read begin.

[ xv ]

C O N T E N T S.

Distressed fate of England in 1763. page I

England calls her colonies to her aid 3 England exacts from her colonies what the fhould but have requefted 14
After having given way, England would be obcyed by her colonies. Meafures which they take to refift her 20
The colonies were in the right to feparate themfelves from their mother-country, independently of all difcontent 33
What was the part which England fhould have taken, when fhe faw the fermenta tion of her colonies

60
England determines to reduce her colonics by force
The colonies break the ties which united them to England, and declare themfelves independent of her 90
Commencement of the war between the United States and England 102

[ xvi ] ${ }^{-}$

Why the confederate provinces did not fucceed in driving the Englifh from the continent of America 123
France acknowledges the independence of the United States. This meafure occafions war between this crown and that of England 135
Spain, not having fucceeded in reconciling England and France, declares for the latter power ${ }^{15} 5^{6}$ What ought to be the politics of the Houre of Pourbon, if victorious 166
What idea flould be formed of the thirteen united provinces

172

R E V O L U T I O N  O F

A M E R I C A.

England was juft difengaged from a nifrerfe long and bloody war, in which her flects fanc of $\begin{gathered}\text { fiand }\end{gathered}$ had difplayed the banner of victory in all ${ }^{\text {in } 1 ; \sigma_{3}}$ feas; in which a dominion, already too vaft, was augmented by an immenfe acceffion of territory in both the Indies. This fplendid face of things might have an ime pofing air abroad; but the nation was reduced within to groan for its acquifitions and its trimphs. Overwhelmed with a debt of $f_{1} 48,000,000$, which coft her an intereft of $£ 4,959,000$, the was fcarcely fufficient to the moft neceflary expences with the five millions eight hundred thoufand pounds which remained to her of her revenue; and this revenue, fo far from being capable of increafe, had no certain and affured confiftency.

[ 2 ]

Land remained loaded with a higher tax than it ever had been in time of peace. New taxes had been laid on windows and on houfes. Thefe acts laid a heavy charge on all real eftate. Wine, plate, cards, dice, all that was regarded as an object of luxury, or amufement, paid more than could have been thought poffible. To reimburfe itfelf for the facrifice made to the prefervation of the public healih, in the prohibition of fpirituous linuors, the treafury had recourfe to malt, beer, cyder, and all the ufual beverages of the people. The fea-ports difpatched nothing to foreign countries, and received nothing from them, but what was burthened cruelly with dutics, on the import and the export. Raw materials and workmanfhip were rifen to fo high a price in Great Britain, that her merchants found themfelves fupplanted in countries where they had never before experienced a competition. The profits of her commerce, with all parts of the globe, amounted not anmually to above tiro millions and a half; and, from this balance in her farour, there muft have been deducted a million and a half, paid in intereft to foreigners, on their capitals placed in her public funds.

$\left[\begin{array}{ll}3\end{array}\right]$

The fprings of the ftate were ftrainect. All the mufcles of the body-politic, experiencing at once a violent tenfion, were in lome fort difplaced. It was a critical moment. It was neceffary to let the people breathe. They could not be relieved by a diminution of expence. That of the government was neceffary, either to give value to conquefts bought at the price of fo much treafure, at the price of fo much blood; or to reftrain the houfe of Bourbon, angered by the humiliations of the laft war, and by the facrifices of the laft peace. In default of other means, to fix both the fecurity of the prefent, and the profperity of the future, an idea was formed of calling the colonies to the aid of the mother-country. This view was wife and juft.

The members of a confederacy ought Eugla: a all, in proportion to the extent of their calls her $\begin{gathered}\text { cilonies } \\ 0\end{gathered}$ powers, to contribute to its defence and to its fplendour, fince it is by the public

$$
B 2
$$

[ 4 ]

power alone that each clafs cant preferve the intire and peaceable enjoyment of its poffeffions. The indigent man has, without doubr, lefs intereft in it than the rich; but he has the intereft of his quiet in the firft infance, and in the next, that of the prefervation of the public wealth, whiclif he is called upon to partake of by his induftry. There is no principle of fociety more evident ; and yet no fault in politics more common than its infraction. Whence can arife this perpetual contradiction between the knowledge and the conduct of thofe who govern? From the vice of the legiflative power, which exaggerates the maintenance of the public power, and ufurps, for its fancies, a part of the funds. deftined to this maintenance. The gold of the trader, and of the hufbandman, with the fubfiftence of the poor, torn from them, in the name of the fate, in their fields and their habitations, and proftituted in courts to intereft and to vice, goes to fwell the pomp of a fet of men who flatter, hate, and corrupt their mafter, goes ultimately into ftill viler hands, to pay the fcandal

[5]

and the ignominy of their pleafures. It is prodigally fquandered in a fattuous fhew of grandeur, the vain decoration of thofe who cannot attain to real grandeur, and in feftivities and entertaimments, the refource of impotent idlenefs, in the midft of the cares and labours which the right government of an empire would demand. A portion of it, it is true, is given to the public wants; but inattention, and incapacity, apply it without judgment, as without œecomomy. Authority deceived, and which will not condefcend even to make an effort at being undeceived, fuffers an unjuft diftribution in the taxes, and a manner of gathering them which is itfelf but an oppreffion more. Then is every patriotic fentiment extinguifhed. A war is eftablifhed between the prince and fubjects. They who raife the revenues of the fate appear to be no other than the enemies of the citizen. He defends his fortune from taxation as he would defend it from invafion. Whatever cunning can purloin from power feems lawful gain; and the fubjects, corrupted by the government, make reprifals on the mafter by whom they are pillaged. They perceive not, that in this unequal combat, they are themfelves dupes and victims. The infatiable and ardent treafury, lefs fatisfied with what is given, than irritated by what has been refufed, reaches eagerly, with a hundred hands, after what one alone has dared to divert from its gripe. It joins the activity of power to that of intereft. Vexations are multiplied, under the fpecious name of chaftifement and juftice; and the monfter who beggars all thofe whom he torments, thanks heaven devoutly for the number of the criminals who have been punifhed by him, and of the crimes by which he is enriched. Happy the fovereign who fhould not difdain, for the prevention of fo many abufes, to render to his fubjects a faithful account of the employment of the fums he might exact! But this fovereign has not yet appeared; and, without doubt, he never will appear. The debt, however, of the protected people, towards the protector-ftate, is not a lefs neccffary and facred tie; and no nation has diformed it. The Englifh colonies in North

[ 6 ]

[7]

America had not given an example of it ; and never had the Britifh miniftry recourfe to them without obtaining the fuccour it folicited.

But this fuccour was granted in gifts, and not in taxes; fince the conceffion of it was preceded by free and public deliberations in the affemblies of each eftablifhment. The mother-country had found herfelf engaged in expenfive and crucl wars. Tumultuous and enterprizing parliaments had difturbed her tranquillity. She had fallen into the hands of minifters corrupt and bold; unhappily difpofed to raife the authority of the throne upon the ruin of all the rights, and all the powers of the people. And even revolutions had taken place, before an attack upon a cuftom, ftablifhed and ftrengthened by the happy experience of two ages, had ever once been dreamed of.

The colonies in the new world had been accuftomed to regard this mode of furnifling their contingent, in men and money, as a right. Had this pretenfion been douit ful, or erroncous, prudence would hase

$\left[\begin{array}{ll}8\end{array}\right]$

forbidden its being too openly attacked. The art of maintaining authority is a delicate art, which requires more circumfpection than is generally thought, They who govern are perhaps too much accuftomed to hold men in contempt. They regard them too much as flaves, fubdued and bent down by nature, whilift they are only fo from habit. If you lay on them a new load, take care left they fhake it off with fury and with intereft. Forget not that the lever of power has no other fulcrum than opinion; that the power of thofe who govern is in reality but the power of thofe who fuffer government. Remind not people attentively occupied by their labours, or fleeping in their chains, to lift up their cyes to truths too terrible for you; and whilt they are obeying, bring not to their remembrance their right to command. When the moment of this fearful roufing fhall arrive; when they fhall have thought in earneft that they are not made for their magiftrates, but that their magiftrates are made for them; when they fhall once have been able to bring themfelves together, to feel the communication of kindred minds, and to pronounce with a voice unanimous; We will not bave this larv; this practice is affenfive; medium is no more ; you will be conftrained, by an unavoidable alternative, either to punifn or to yield ; either to be tyrannical or weak; and your authority henceforth detefted or defpifed, whichever part it take, will have to chufe from the people but their open infolence, or their hidden hate.

[ 9 ]

The firft duty, therefore, of a wife adminiftration, is to manage the prevailing opinions in any country: for opinion is the property moft dear to man, dearer even than his life, and confequently much dearer than his wealth. A wife adminiftration may, without doubt, endeavour to rectify opinions by information, or to alter them by perfuafion, if they tend to the diminution of the public power. But it is not permitted to thwart them without neceffity; and there never was any neceffity for rejecting the fyitem adopted by North America.

In effect, whether the different fettlements in this new world had been authorized,

[ 10 ]

rizen, as they wifhed, to fend reprefenta: tives to parliament, where they might have deliberated with their fellow-citizens on the neceffities of the Britifl empire at large; or, whether they had continued to examine within themfelves what fhould be the contribution which it was right for then to make, no inconvenience could have refulted from it to the treafury. In one cafe, the roice of their delegated claimants would have been drowned in that of the majority; and thefe provinces would have found themfelves legally loaded with fuch a portion of the burden as it fhould be wifhed to make them bear. In the other, the miniftry, continuing to difpofe of the dignities, the employments, the penfions, and eren of the elections, would hare experienced no more refiftance to its will in that hemifphere than in this.

But the maxims confecrated by cuftom America were not founded in prejudice aione. . The pretenfions of the colonifts refted on the nature of their charters, and on the ftill more folid bafis of that right of cecty Englifh fubject, not to be taxed without confent, expreffed by himfelf or his reprefentative. This right, which ought to be that of every people, fince it is founded on the cternal law of reafon, originated fo far back as in the reign of the firft Edward. From that epoch the Englifhman has never loft fight of it. In peace, in war, under weak or wicked kings, in flavifh or tumultuous times, it has been his unremitted claim. Under the Tudors, this Englifhman has been feen to give up fome of his moft precious privileges, and, unrefiftingly, to fubmit his neck to the axe of tyrants; but never to renounce the right of felf-taxation. It was in the defence of it that he has fhed rivers of blood, that he has punifhed or dethroned his kings. In fhort, at the Revolution in 1688 , this right was folemnly acknowledged, by the celebrated act, in which liberty was feen to trace, with the fame hand with which it had driven out the royal defpot, the conditions of the contract between a nation and the fovereign it had newly chofen. This prerogative of a people, much more facred, without all queftion, than fo many imagmary rights which fuperftition would fanctify in tyrants, was, with regard to England, at once both the inftrument and the rampart of her liberty. She thought, the felt, that it was the only barrier which could for ever limit defpotifm; that the moment which ftrips a people of this privilege, condemns it to oppreffion; and that the funds, raifed in appearance for its fecurity, are fooner or later fubfervient to its ruin. The Englifhnaan, in founding his colony, had carried with him thefe principles beyond the feas; and the fame ideas had been tranfmitted to his progeny.

[II]

[ 12 ]

Ah! if in the countries even of Europe, in which flavery feems long fince to have taken its feat in the midft of vices, of riches, and of arts; in which the defpotifm of armies fupports the defpotim of courts; in which man, chained from his cradle, and bound tightly by all the cords both of policy and fuperfition, has never breathed the air of liberty; if in the fe countries, notwithftanding, they who have once in their lives reflected on the fate of nations, cannot forbear adopting the max-

$\left[\begin{array}{ll}13\end{array}\right]$

ims, and envying the happy people who knew how to make it the ground-work and foundation of their conflitution; how much more ought the Englifh natives of America to be attached to the glorious birth-right they inherit! They know the price at which their ancefors had bought it. The very foil which they inhabit muft produce iu them a fentiment favourable to thefe ideas. Difperfed throughout an immenfe continent; free as the wild nature which furrounds them, amidft their rocks, their mountains, the vaft plains of their deferts, on the confines of thofe forefts in which all is fill in its favage ftate, and where there are no traces of either the flavery or the tyramy of man, they feem to reccive from every natural object a leffon of liberty and independance. Befides, thefe people, given up almof all of them to agriculture and to commerce, to ufeful labours which elevate and fortify the foul in infpiring fimple manners, hitherto as far removed from riches as from poverty, cannot bc yet corrupted either by the excefs of luxury, or by the excefs of want. It is in this fate above all others, that the man who enjoys liberty is moft capable to maintain it, and to fhew himfelf jealous in the defence of an hereditary right, which feems to be the moft certain fecurity for all the reft. Such was the refolution of the Americans.

$\left[\begin{array}{ll}14\end{array}\right]$

England exacts from ner colonies rant of thefe difpofitions, or whether they what fhe thould but have reguefted.

Whether the Britifh miniftry were ignohoped that their delegates would fucceed in changing them, they laid hold of the moment of a glorious peace for exacting a forced contribution from the colonies. For war, and let it be well remarked, war, whether unfortunate or fuccefsful, ferves always as a pretext for the ufurpations of governments; as if the directors of the warring powers propofed to themfelves by it lefs to vanquifh their enemies than to eulave their fubjects. The year 1764 faw the birth of the famous ftamp-act, which forbid the admiffion in the courts of juftice of any inftrument which fhould not be written on paper marked and fold for the profit of the Britifh treafury.

The

$\left[\begin{array}{ll}15\end{array}\right]$

The Englifh provinces of North Ancrica become indignant at this ufurpation of their moft precious and moft facred rights. By an unanimous agrecment they renounce the confumption of whaterer was furnifhed them by the mother-country; 'till it fhould hase withdrawn this illegal and oppreflive bill. Eren the women, whofe weaknels might have been feared, are the moft ardent, facrificing the fubferviencies to their drefs and ornament ; and the men, animated by this example, give up on their part other conveniences and enjoyments. Many cultivators of land. quit the plouigh, to form themfelves to the induiftry of the worknop; and wool, flax, and coitoir, coarfely wrought, are fold. at the price which would before have jurchared the fineft cloths and the moft beautiful ftufis.

This kind of confpiracy ftuns the goremment. By the clamour of the merchants, whofe wares are without vent, its inquietude is encreafed. The enemies of the miniftry uphold thefe difcontents; and the ftamp-act is reraked after twa years of a convulfive agitation, which in other times would have lighted up a civil war.

[ 16 ]

But the triumph of the Colonies is of fhort duration. The parliament, which had retreated but with extreme repugnance, ordains, in 1767 , that the revenue which could not be obtained by means of ftamps fhould be raifed by taxes on the glafs, the lead, the pafte-board, the colours, the paper-hangings, and the tea, which are carried from England to America. The people of the Northern Continent are not lefs revolted at this innovation than at the former. In vain are they told that no one could difpute the right of Great Britain to lay on her exportations the duties which her intereft demands, fince fhe dênies not to her Colonies, fituated beyond the feas, the liberty of fabricating themfelves the wares fubjected to the new taxation. This fubterfuge appears but as a derifion to men, who, being cultivators of land alone, and reduced to the having no communication but with their mother country, cannot procure, either by their owni induitry, or by foreign conncetions, the objects which had recently been taxed. Whether this tribute be paid in the old or new world, they perceive that the word makes no alteration in the thing, and that their liberty would not be lefs attacked by this mode, than by that which had been repelled by them with fuccefs. The Colonifts fee clearly that the government would beguile them; and they will not be beguiled. Thefe political fophifms appear to them as they are, the mank of tyranny.

[ 17 ]

Nations in general are made more for feeling than for thinking. The greateft part of them never had an idea of analyfing the nature of the power by which they are governed. They obey without reflection, and becaufe they have the habit of obeying. The origin and the object of the firft national aflociations being unknown to them, all refiftance to government appears to them a crime. It is chiefly in thore ftates where the principles of legiflation are confounded with thofe of religion, that this blindnefs is to be met with. The habit of believing farours the habit

$$
\left[\begin{array}{lll}
-18 & ]
\end{array}\right.
$$

of fuffering. Man renounces not any one object with impunity. It feems as if nature would revenge herfelf upon him who dares thus to degrade her. The fervile difpofition which the ftamps upon his foul in confequence, extends itfelf throughout. It makes a duty of refignation as of meanners; and kiffing chains of all kinds with refpect, trembles to examine either its doctrines or its laws. In the fame manner that a fingle extravagance in religious opinions is fufficient to make many more to be adopted by minds once deceived, a firft ufurpation of government opens the door to all the reft. He who believes the greater, believes the lefs; he wha can do the greater, can do the lefs. It is by this double abufe of credulity and authority that all the abfurdities in matters of religion and of policy have been introduced into the world for the harraffing and the crufhing of the human race. Thus at the firft fignal of liberty amongit nations, they have been prompted to fhake off both thefe yokes together; and the epoch in which the human mind began to difcufs.

$\left[\begin{array}{lll}{[19}\end{array}\right]$

the abufes of the church and cleigy; is that in which reafon perceived at laft the rights of men; and in which courage at. temipted to fet the firft limits to defpotic power. The principles of toleration and of liberty, eftablifhed in the Englifh colonies, had made them a different people from all others, There it was known what was the dignity of man; and when the Britifh miniftry violated it, it could not be otherwife but that a poople all compored of denizens, fhould rife againft the wickednefs of the attempt.

Three years elapied, without a revenue from any one of the taxes which had fo wounded the Americans to the quick. This was fomething : but it was not all to which men jealous of their prerogatives had pretenfions. They infifted upon a general and formal renunciation of what had been fo illegally ordained; and this fatisfaction was given them in 1770. Tea only was excepted. But the objeet of this exception was only to palliate the fhame of entirely giving up the fuperiority of the motherecountry over her colonies: for this

$$
\left[\begin{array}{lll}
20 & 20
\end{array}\right]
$$

duty was not more cogently exacted thart the others had been.
After har- . The miniftry, deceived by their deleing gisen way, England would be obered by her cogates, believed undoubtedly that the difpofition of the new-world was altered, onies. Mea- when, in 1773 , they ordered the collection fures which they take to of the duty upon tea.
refit her.
At this news the indignation becomes general in North America. In fome provinces, formal thanks are agreed upon to be rendered to the mafters of veffels who would not fuffer this production to make any part of their cargo. In others, the merchants to whom it is configned will not receive it. Here, he is declared an enemy of his country who fhall dare to yend it. 'There, they are ftigmatized with the fame reproach who fhall keep it in their ftores. Many provinces folemnly renounce the ufe of this elegant refrefhment: A ftill greater number burn what they had remaining of this leaf, 'till then the object of their de-: light. . The tea fent to this part of the globe was valued at more than two hundred thowind pounds; and not a fingle cheft of it was landed. Bofton was the principal principal theatre of this infurrection. Its inhabitants deftroyed, in their very port, three cargoes of tea which arrived from Europe.

[ 21 ]

This great town had always appeared more occupied by a fenfe of its rights than the reft of America. The leaft attempt that was made upon their privileges had been repelled without fcruple and without referve. This refiftance, fometimes not unaccompanied by tumult, had for fome years been tirefome to government. The miniftry, who had a vengeance to wreak, feized too eagerly upon the circumftance of a blameable exccis; and required the parliament to punifh it fevereit.

Moderate men wifhed that the offending sown might be fentenced only to an indemnification proportioned to the wafte that had been made in its road, and to fiuch amends as it ought to make for not having punifhed this act of riolence. This fentence was thought too flight; and on the $1^{\text {th }}$ 解 March, 1774 , a bill was paffed for fhutting up the port of Bofton, and forbidding any thing to be landed or soaded at it,

[ 22 ]

The court of London applauded itfelf for fo rigorous a law, and doubted nat but that it would bring the Boftonians to that difpofition to flavery which it had vainly taboured 'till then to give them. If, contrary to all appearance, thefe flurdy men thould perfevere in their pretenfians, their meighbours would be ardent in profiting from the interdiction laid upon the principal harbour of the province. Suppofing the worft, the other colonies, long fince jealous of that of Maffachufet, would abandon it with indifference to its melancholy fate; and gather up the immenfe trade which wauld flow in to them on the ride of its misfortuncs. By thefe means would be broken the union of there different eftablifhments, which had for fome sears paft acquired a greater degrec of confitency than was pleafing to the mother country.

The expectation of the miniftry was totally deceived. Ap act of rigour fometrimes overawes. The people who have murmured as long as the thunder-ftorm growled only at a diftance, when it comes to burft upon them frequently fubmit. It is then that they weigh the advantages and difadrantages of refitance; that they contemplate their own ftrength and that of their opprefors; that a panic terror feizes thofe who have every thing to lofe, without any thing to gain ; that they lift up their roice, that they intimidate, that they corrupt; that divifion arifes in the minds of men, and that the community is feparated into two factions, which irritate each other, which come oftentimes to blows, and cut each other's throats under the eyes of their tyrants, whe with fwect complacency behold their fereaming blood. But tyrants feldom find accomplices but amongtt a people already corrupted to their hands It is vice which gives them alfies amongit thofe whom they opprefs. It is ummanly bftnefs, which, filled with terrors; dares mot barter its repofe for honourable peril. It is the vile ambition to command, which lends its arm to defpotic power, and confents to be a flave in order to domineer; to give up a people in order to partake their fpoil; and to renounce real honour for the obtaining of titles, the nick-names of honour. It is, above all, the indifferent and cold perfonality, which is the laft vice amongft a people, the laft crime of governments, for it is ever the government which gives it birth; it is that, which from principle facrifices a nation to a man, and the happinefs of an age and of pofte. rity to the enjoyment of a day and of a moment. None of there vices, the production of a faciety opulent and voluptu= ous, of a fociety grown old and verging to its end, belong to a people newly eftablifhed and occupied in ufeful labours. The Americans remained united, The execution of a bill, which they called inhuman, barbarous, and bloody, tended but to ftrengthen them in the refolution of maintaining their rights with the more accord and conftancy.

[ 23 ]

[ 24 ]

At Bofton, the acrid and ardent fpirit is more and more exalted. The cry of religion adds force to that of liberty. The houfes of worfhip re-echo with the moft violent exhortations againft England. It was without doubt an interefting fpectacle for philofophy, to fee that eren in temples, at the foot of altars, where fuperftition has fo often bleffed the chains of nations, where priefts have fo often flattered tyrants, liberty lifted up her voice in defence of the privileges of an oupreffed people; and if it can be thought that the Deity rouchafes to look down upon the umappy feuds of men, it was better pleafed undoubtedly to fee its fanctuary confecrated to this ufe, and hymns to liberty make a part of the worfhip by which it was addreffed. Thefe exhortations of the preachers muft have had a great effect ; and when a free people invokes hearen againft oppreffion, it delays not long to have iecourfe to arms.

[ 25 ]

The other inhabitants of the province of Maffachufet difdain eren the idea of drawing the leaft adrantage from the dif. afters of the capital. They think but of drawing clofer the bonds which unite them with the Boftonians, difpofed rather to feek a grave in the buins of their common country, than to let the leaft aflatult be made made on rights which they had learned to prize more highly than their lives.

[ 26 ]

All the provinces attack themfelves to the caufe of Bofton; and their affection encreafes in proportion to the fufferings of this unhappy town. Nearly as culpable of a refitance fo feverely punifhed, they are well aware that the mother-country. but defers her rongeance againft them; and that all the grace with which the moft favoured can be fiattered, is to be the bat on which the hand of oppreffion fhall be doomed to fall.

Thefe difpofitions to a gencral infurref* tion are augmented by the act againft Bofton, which is feer carculating throughout the continent upon paper edged with black, emblematical of mourning for liberty departed. Soon the difquietide communicates itfelf from houfe to houf. The inhabitants affemble and converfe in. gether in the public places; and writings, full of eloquence and vigour, are delivered every where from the prefs.
"The fewerities of the Britifh Parliz$\because$ ment againft 3 Boiton (fay they in thefe " writinge)

[ 27 ]

" writings) fhould caufe all the American " provinces to tremble. They have now " nothing left them but to chufe between " fire and fiword and the horrors of death, "or the yoke of paffive, flavifh obedi" ence. Behold the era of an important " revolution is at length arrived, the event "f of which, as it fhall be happy or fuc"cefslefs, will claim and fix for ever " either the regret or the admiration of "s pofterity.
" Shall we be freemen, or be flaves?
" On the folution of this grand problent " is about to depend, for the prefent, the " fate of three millions of men, and, for " the future, the happinefs or mifery of "t their numberbefs defcendants. " Awake then, roufe then, O Ameri" cans! Never did clouds fo black hang " over the region you inhabit. You are ". ealled rebels, becaufe you will not be " taxed but by your reprefentatives. Vin" dicate this juft pretenifion by your cou"rage, or feal the lofs of it with all your 4 blood.

$\left[\begin{array}{ll}28 & \end{array}\right]$

${ }^{6}$ Time for deliberation is no more. " Whilft the hand of the oppreffor labours " inceffantly to forge your chains, filence " would be guilt, inaction infamy. Let " the prefervation of the rights of the "commonweal be your fupreme law. "That man would be the laft of naves, " who, in the danger into which the 1 i * berty of America is fallen, would not " exert every effort to preferve it." This difpofition was the common one : but the important object, the difficult thing, in the midet of a general tumult, was to contrive that a calm might be brought on, by fayour of which might be formed a concert of wills, to give dignity, ftrength, and confiltency to their refolutions. It is this concert, which, of a multitude of fcattered parts, and each eafily to be broken, compofes a whole that is not to be rendered tractable, unlefs it be to be divided by policy or by power. The nccefity of this grand combination, or totality, is ftrikingly perceived by the provinces of New Hamphire, of Maffachufet, of Rhode-Iland, of Comecticut, of New York,

[ 29 ]

York, of New Jerfey, of the Delaware counties, of Maryland, of Pemfylvania, of Virginia, and of both the Carolinas. Thefe twelve colonies, which were afterwards joined by Georgia, fent deputies to Philadelphia, in the month of September 1774, charged with the defence of their rights and interefts.

The difputes of the mother-country with her colonies, affume at this period an importance to which they had not been before intitled. It is no longer a few individuals who make an obftinate refiftance to imperious mafters. It is the ftruggle of one body of men againft another; of the Congrefs of America againft the Parliament of England; of a nation againft a nation. By the refolutions taken on either fide, minds mutually are heated. The ferment of animofity increafes. All hope of reconciliation vanifhes. On each fide the fword is whetted. Great Britain fends troops to the new world. This other hemifphere prepares for its defence. Its citizens become foldiers. The combuttibles are collected; the corflagration is about to blaze.
Gage,

[ 30 ]

Gage, the commander of the royal troops, fends from Bofton, in the night of the 18 th of April, 1775 , a detachment charged with the deftruction of a magazine of arms, and other military flores, collected by the Americans at Concord. This body of troops meet at Lexington with fome militia, whom they difperfe with little difficulty, continue their march rapidly; and execute the commiffion to which they had been appointed. But fcarcely are: they on their return towards the capital. but they find themfelves affailed, for the fpace of fifteen miles, by a furious multitude, and death on each fide is given and received. Englifh blood, fo often fhed inz Europe by Englifh hands, irrigates America in its turn, and the civil war is cribarked in.

On the fame field of battle, the follow-: ing nonths, more regular combats are beheld. Warren becomes one of the victims: of thefe unnatural and murderous actions: The Congrefs honour his afhes.
" He is not dead, (faid the orator) this. " excellent citizen fhall never die. His'

$\left[\begin{array}{ll}11\end{array}\right]$

${ }^{6}$ memory fhall be for ever prefent, and
" for ever dear, to all good men, to all " who love their country. In the fhort ${ }^{6}$ Space of a life but of three and thirty " years, he had difplayed the talents of a " ftatefinan, the virtues of a fenator, the ${ }^{6}$ foul of a hero.
" Approach, all you whom the fame " intereft infpirits; approach your coun${ }^{6}$ tryman's ftill bleecting body. Wafh ${ }^{6}$ with your tears his honourable wounds.
ss But hang not too long over this inani-
" mated corfe. Return to your habitati-
"s ons to fill them with deteftation at the scrime of tyranny. Let your horrible
" deforiptions of it make each particular s hair to ftand on end upon your chil"dren's heads, inflame thcir eyes with " noble rage, ftamp menaces on their
"brows, and draw, by their mouths, indig-
"" nation from their hearts! Then, then,
" Thall you give them arms; and your latt,
" your fondent wifh fhall be, that they
" may return victorious, or may die like st Marren."

[ $\left.3^{3} \cdot\right]$

The difturbances by which the province of Maflachufet was agitated, were repeated in the other provinces. 'The fecnes, inaced, were not bloody, becaufe there were no Britifh troops; but the Americans feize every where on the forts, the arms, and the nilitary fores; they every where expel their governors, and the other agents of England; and every where harrafs fuch of the inhabitants as appeared favourable to its caufe. Some enterprizing men have the fipirit even to take poffeffion of the works formerly erreted by the French upon the lake Champlain, betwecn New England and Canada, and to make an irruption into this vaft region.

Whilft fimple individuals, or detached diftricts, are thus ufcfully ferving the common caufe, the Congrefs is occupied with the care of afembling an army. The command of it is given to George Wafhington, a native of Virginia, and known by forie happy exploits in preceding wars. Inftanily the new general flies to the province of Naffachufet, drives the royal troops from poft to poft, and obliges them to thut themfelves up in Bofton. Six thoufand of thefe old foldiers, efcaped from the fword, from ficknefs, from all the miferies incident to their profeffion, and preffed by hunger, or by the enemy, cmbark the 24 th of March 1776 , with a precipitation which partakes of flight. They go to feek an afylum in Nova Scotia, which remained, as well as Florida, faithful to its ancient mafters.

[ 33 ]

This fuccefs was the firft ftep of Englifh $\begin{gathered}\text { The colo- } \\ \text { nies were in }\end{gathered}$ America towards the revolution. It was the right to begun to be openly defired The princi-feparace begun to be openly defired. The princi- themfelves ples which juftified it were difperfed on motherall fides. Thefe principles, whlch were country, in- dependenty indebted for their birth to Europe, and of all difparticularly to England, had been tranfplanted in America by philofophy. The knowledge, and the difcoveries of the mo-ther-country were turned againft herfelf, and the was told that,

Care muft be taken not to confound together fociety and government. - That they may be known diftinetly, their origin fhould be confidered.

[ 34 ]

Man, thrown, as it were, by chance upon this globe, furrounded by all the evils of nature ; obliged continually to defend and protect his life againft the forms and tempefts of the air, againft the inundations of water, againit the fire of volcanos, againft the intemperature of frigit or torrid zones, againft the fterility of the earth, which refufes him aliment, or its bancful fecundity, which makes poifons Epring up beneath hisfcet; in thort, againg the claws and teeth of favage beafts, who difpute with him his habitation and his prey, and, attacking his perfon, feem refolved to render themfelves. rulers of this globe, of which he thinks. nimfelf to be the mafter: man in this ftate, alonc and abandoned to himfelf, could do nothing for his prefervation. It was neceffary, therefore, that he fhould unite himelf, and affociate with his like, in orser to bring together their ftrength and intelligence in common flock. It is by this union that he has triumphed aver fo many evils, that he has, fafhioned this globe to his ufe, reftrained the rivers, fubjugated 'the feas, infured his fubfiftence, conquered a part of the animals in obliging them to ferve him, and driven others far from his empire, to the depths of deferts or of woods, where their number diminifhes from age to age. What a man alone would not have been able to effect, men have executed in concert; and all together they preferve their work, Such is the origin, fuch the advantage and the end of all fociety.

[ 35 ]

Government owes its birth to the necelfity of preventing and repreffing the injuries which the affociated individuals had to fear from one another. It is the fentinel who watches, in order that the common labours be not difturbed.

Thus fociety originates in the wants of men, government in their vices. Society tends always to good; government ought alway's to tend to the repreffing of evil. Society is the firft, it is in its origin independent and free; government was inftituted for it, and is but its inftrument. It is for one to command; it is for the other to obey. Society created the pubiic patver; government, which has received it from

$$
\mathrm{D}_{2} \text { focicty; }
$$

$\left[\begin{array}{lll}36 & \\ \hline\end{array}\right]$

fociety, ought to confecrate it entirely to its ufe. In fhort, fociety is effentially good; government, as is well known, may be, and is but too often evil.

It has been faid that we were all born equal ; that is not fo : that we had all the fame rights. I am ignorant of what are rights, where there is an inequality of talents, or of ftrength, and no fecurity nor fanction: that nature offered to us all the fame dwelling, and the fame refources; that is not fo: that we were all endowed indifferently with the fame means of defence; that is not fo: and I know not in what fenfe it can be true, that we all enjoy the fame qualities of mind and body.

There is amongft men an original inequality which nothing can remedy. It muit laft for ever; and all that can be obtained by the beft legiflation, is, not to deftroy it, but to prevent the abufe of it.

Put in making diftinctions between her children like a fep-mother, in creating fome children ftrong, and others weak, has mot hature herfelf fomed the germ or prinsple of rymany? I do pot think it can be denied; efpecially if we look back to a time anterior to all legiflation, a time in which man will be feen as paffionate and as yoid of reafon as a brute.

[ 37 ]

What then have founders of nations, what have legiflators propofed to themfelves? To obviate all the difafters arifing from this germ when it is expanded, by a fort of artificial equality, which might reduce all the members of a fociety, without exception, under an impartial, fole authority. It is a fword which moves gently, equably, and indifferently, orer every head: but this fword was ideal. It was neceffary that there fhould be a hand, a corporeal being who fhould hold it.

What has refulted thence? Why, that the hiftory of civilized man is but the hiftory of his mifery. All the pages of it are fained with blood; fome with the blood of the oppreffors, the others with the blood of the oppreffed.

In this point of view, man appears more wicked and more miferable than a beaft. Different fpecies of bealts fubfilt on different fipecies. But focieties of men have never ceafed to attack each other. Even in the fame fociety there is no condition but devours and is devoured, whatever may have been or are the forms of the government, or artificial equality, which have been oppofed to the primitive and natural inequality.

[ $3^{8}$ ]

But are thefe forms of government, fuppofing them made by the choice, and the free choice, of the firft fettlers in a country, and whatever fanction they may have received, whether that of oaths, or of unanimous accord, or of their duration, are they obligatory upon their defcendants? There is no fuch thing : and it is impoffible that you Englifhmen, who have fucceffively undergone fo many different revolutions in your political conftitution, toffed as you have been from monarchy to tyranny, from tyranny to ariftocracy, from ariftocracy to democracy, and from democracy to anarchy; it is impoffible that you, without accufing yourfelves of rebellion and of perjury, can think otherwife than I do.

We examine things with a philofophic eye; and it is well known, that it is not the fpeculations of philofophers which bring on civil troubles. No fubjects are more patient than we are. I proceed then in purfuit of my object, without any caufe to fear that mifchicf can follow from my reafoning.

[. 39 ]

If the people are happy under their form of government, they will keep it. If they are unhappy, it will not be cither your opinions or mine, it will be the impofibility of fuffering more, and longer, which will determine them to change it ; a falutary impulfe, which the oppreffor will call revolt, though it be bitt the juft exercife of a natural and unalienable right of the man who is oppreffed, and even of the man who is not oppreffed.

A man wills and chufes for himfelf. He cannot will nos chufe for another; and it would be a madnefs to will and to chufe for him who is yet unborn, for him who will not yet exift for ages. There is no individual but who, difcontented with the form of the government of his country, may go clfewhere to fcek a better. There is no focicty but which has the fame right to change, as their anceftors had to adopt, their form of government. Upon this point, it is with focieties as if they were at the firft moment of their civilization. Without which there would be a great evil; nay, the greateft of evils would be without a remedy. Millions of men would be condemned to mifery without end. Conclude then with me,

[ 40 ]

That there is no form of government which has the prerogative to be immutable.

No political authority, which, created yeiterday, or a thoufand years ago, may not be abrogated in ten years' time or tomorrow.

No power, however refpectable, however facred, that is authorized to regard the ftate as its property.

Whoever thinks otherwife is a flave. It is to be an idolater of the work of his own hands.

Whoever thinks otherwife is a madman, who devotes himfelf to eternal mifery, who devotes to it his family, his children, and his childrens' children, in allowing to his

[ 4I ]

anceftors the right of ftipulating for him when he exifted not, and in arrogating to himfelf the right of Atipulating for a progeny which does not yet exift.

All authority in this world has begun either by the confent of the fubjects, or by the power of the mafter. In both one and the other cafe, it may juftly end. There is no prefcription in favour of tyranny againft liberty.

The truth of thefe principles is fo much the more effential, becaufe that all power by its very nature tends to defpotifm, even in the moft jealous nations, even in yours, ye Englifhmen, yes, in yours.

I have heard it faid by a whig, by a fanatic, if you will; but words of great fenfe efcape fometimes from a madman; I have heard it faid by him, that fo long as the power fhould be wanting of taking to Tyburn a bad king, or at leaft a bad minifter, with as little formality, preparation, tumult, or furprize, as the obfcureft malefactor is conducted thither, the nation would not have either that juft idea, or that fuil enjoyment, of their rights, which became a people who dared to think or to fay that they were free; and yet an adminiftration, by your own acknowledgement, ignorant, corrupted, and audacious, precipitates you, with imperioufnefs and with impunity, into the moft profound abyfs!

[ 42 ]

The quantity of your circulating cafh is inconfderable. You are overwhelmed with paper; which you have under all forts of denominations. Were all the gold of Etsrope collected in your treafury, it would fcarcely pay the nation's debt. We know not by what incredible illufion this fictitious money is kept up. The moft frivolous crent might in the courfe of a day throw it into difcredit. There is need but of an alarm to bring on a fudden bankruptcy. The dreadful confequences which would follow this failure of faith, are beyond our imagination. And, behold, fuch is the intant marked out for you to make you declare againft your colonies, that is, to maike you raife up againft yourfelves, an unjuft, mad, ruinous war. What will become of you, when an important branch of your commerce thall be deftroyed; when you fhall have but a third of your poffeffions; when you fhall have maffacred a million or two of your countrymen; when your force fhall be exhaufted, your traders ruined, your manufacturers reduced to ftarve; when your debt fhall be augmented, and your revenue decreafed! Look well to it; the blood of the Americans will fooner or later fall heavy on your heads. Its effufion will be revenged by your own hands; and you are arriving at the point.

[ 43 ]

But, fay you, there people are rebels.Rebels! And why? becaufe they will not be your flaves. A people fubjected to the will of another people, who can difpofe as they chufe of their government, of their laws, and of their trade ; tax them at their pleafure ; fet bounds to their induftry, and enchain it by arbitrary prohibitions, are bond-fervants, yes, certainly are bond-fervants; and their fervitude is worfe than what they would undergo if governed by a tyrant. Deliverance from the oppreffion of a tyrant is effected by his expulfion, or his death. You have delivered jourfelves by each of thefe methods. But a nation is not to be put to death, is not to be expelled. Liberty is only to be expected from a rupture, which by its confequences involves one of the nations, and fometimes both of them, in ruin. A tyrant is a monfter with a fingle head, which may be ftruck off at a fingle blow. A tyrannic nation is an hydra with a thoufand heads, for the cutting off of which a thoufand ivords muft be lifted up together. The crime of oppreffion committed by a tyrant collects all the indignation upon him alone. The commiffion of the fame crime by a numerous fociety, fcatters the horrour and the fhame of it upon a multitude, which never blufhes. It is every body's fault and nobody's; and the refentment of injury wanders wildly in defpair, without knowing where to fix, or whither it is carricd.

[ 44 ]

But they are our fuljects-Your fubjects! no more than the inhabitants of Wales are fubjects to thofe of Lancałhire. The authority of one nation over another cannot be founded but upon conqueft, upon upon general confent, or upon conditions propofed on one part, and accepted on the other. Conqueft binds no more than theft : the confent of anceftors cannot be obligatory upon defcendants: and there can be no condition which muft not be undertood to be exclufive of the facrifice of liberty. Liberty is not to be bartered for any thing, becaufe there is not any thing which is of a comparable price. Such have been the difcourfes held by you to your tyrants, fuch hold we to you for your colonifts.

[ 45 ]

The earth zelpich they occupy is our'sYour's! it is thus you call it becaufe you ufurped it. But be it fo. Does not the charter of conceffion oblige you to treat the Americans as countrymen? Do you do fo? But we are well employed here truly in talking of conceffions by charters, by which men grant what they are not mafters of, what confequently they have not the right to grant to a handful of weak people, forced by circumftances to receive as a gratification that which belongs to them of natural right. And then, have the defcendants who are now living been called to a compact figned by their anceftors? Either confefs the truth of this principle, or recall the defcendants of James. What right had you to drive him away which we have not to feparate ourfelves from you? fay the Americans to you: and what have you to fay in anfwer?

[ 46 ]

They are ungrateful, we are their founders; we bave been their defenders; wa bave run in debt upon their accouni--Say, as muck or more upon your own than theirs. If you have undertaken their defence, it was as you would have undertaken that of the Sultan of Conftantinople, had your ambition or your intereft required it. But have they not requited you, in delivering up to you their productions; in receiving your merchandize exclufively at the exorbitant price you would pleafe to put upon it; in fubjecting themfelves to prohibitions which cramped their induftry, and to reftrictions by which you have oppreffed their pro. perty? Have they not helped you? Have they not run in debt upon your ac* count? Hare they not taken arms and fought fought for you? When you have made your requefts to them, which is the proper way of dealing with freemen, have they not complied with them? When did you ever experience a refufal from them, but when you clapped a bayonet to their breaft, and faid, Your money or life; die or be תaves? What! becaufe you have been beneficent, have you a right to be oppreffive? What! and fhall nations too build on gratitude the barbarous claim, to debafe, and trample under foot, thofe who have had the misfortune to receive their favours? Ah! individuals perhaps, thouglz it is by no means a duty, individuals may, perhaps, in a benefactor tolerate a tyrant. In them, it is great, it is magnanimous, undoubtedily, to confent to be wretched, that they may not be ungrateful. But nations have a different morality. The puh. lic happinefs is the firtt law, as the firft duty. The firft obligation of thefe great bodies is with themfelves. They owe, before all oiher things, liberty and juftice to the members which compofe them. Every child which is born to the ftate, CVEPY

[ 47 ]

[ 48 ]

every new citizen who comes to breathe the air of the country he has chofen, or nature given him, is intitled to the greateft happinefs he can enjoy. Every obligation which cannot be reconciled with that, is broken. Every contrary claim, is a wicked attempt upon his rights. And what is it to him, that his anceftors have been relieved, if he is deftined to be himfelf oppreffed? With what right can be exacted from him the payment of this ufurious debt of benefits, which he has never felt? No, no. The wifhing to arm one's felf with fuch a claim, againft a whole nation, and its poofterity, is to overthrow all the ideas of policy and order, and, whilft one invokes the name of morality, to betray all its laws. What have you not done for Hanover? Do you command at Hanover? All the republics of Greece were bound together by mutual fervices; but did any one exact, as a mark of gratitude, the right of difpofing of the government of the fuccoured flate?

Our konour is engaged--Say, that of your bad minifters, and not your's. In what

[ 49 ]

What confifts the true honour of him who has been miftaken? Is it to perfift in his error, or to acknowledge it? Has he who returns to a fenfe of juftice, any caufe to blufh? Englifhmen, you have been too hafty. Why did you not wait, till the Americans had been corrupted, as you are, by riches? Then, they would have thought no more highly of their liberty, than you do of your own. Then it would have been necdlefs to take arms, againft men fubcued by opulence. But what inftant have you chofen for attacking them? That in which what they had to lofe, their liberty, could not be balanced by what they had to keep.

But later they suould be more nume-rous--I agree, they would. What then have you attempted? the enflaving a people who fhall be unfettered in fpite of you by time. In twenty, in thirty years, the remembrance of your atrocious deeds will ftill be frefh; and the fruit of them will be ravifhed from you. Then, there will remain to you but remorfe and fhame. There is a decree of nature which you fhall not change; which is, that great bodies give laws to little ones. But, tell me, if the Americans fhould then undertake againft Great Britain, what you have now undertaken againft them, what would you fay? Precifely what they at this moment fay to you. Why fhould motives which affect you fo little in their mouths, appear to you more folid in your own?

[ 50 ]

They will not obey our parliament, nor adopt our ordinances--Did they make them? Can they change them?

We obey them readily enough, suithout bave ing bad, in time paft, or baving in the prefent, any influence over them-T.That is to fay, that you are flaves; and that you cannot bear that men fhould be free. However, do not confound the fituation of the Americans with your own. You have reprefentatives, and they have not. You have voices which fpeak for you, and no perfon ftipulates for them. If indeed there voices are bought and fold, it is an excellent reafor for their difdaining fuch a frimolous advantage.

[ 51 ]

They wift to be independent of us -..Are not you fo of them?

They will rever be able to fupport themSelves without us-- If that be fo, be quiet. Neceffity will bring them back. And if we floould not be able to fubfyt without them- It would be a great mif: fortune : but to cut their throats in order to get out of it, is a fingular expedient.
$\dot{I}$ : is for their intereft, it is for their good, that we are fevere with-them; as one is fevere zuith fruntic cbildren--Their intereft! Their good! And who made you judges of thefe tivo objects which fo nearly touch them, and which they flould better know than you? If it fhould happen, that a man fhould make a forcible entry into another's houfe, becaufe, forfooth, he is a man of great fenfe, and nobody more able to maintain peace and good order for his neighbour; fhould not one be in the right to humbly beg he would be pleafed to take himfelf away, and to trouble his head about his own affairs? And if the affairs of this officious hypocrite fhould be very badly ordered? If he fhould be at the E. 2 bottom but an ambitious mortal, who under the pretence of fettling and ordering, fhould have a violent inclination to ufurp? If he fhould cover with the mafk of benevolence, but views full of injuftice, fuch, for example, as to get himfelf out of Atraits and difficulties at his neighbour's coft?
botom

$\left[\begin{array}{ll}52\end{array}\right]$

We are the mother-country-What, always the moft holy names to ferve as a reil to intereft and ambition! The mo-ther-country ! Fulfill the duties of it then. Befides, colonies are formed of different nations, amongit which fome will grant, others refufe you this appellation; and all will with one roice tell you, There is a time when the authority of parents over their children ceafes; and this time is when the children are able to provide for themfelres. What term have you fixed for our emancipation? Be candid, and you will allow that you had promifed yourfelves to be able to hold us in a wardfhip or minority which flould never end. If, indeed, this wardhip were not to have turned for as into an infupportable conftraint ; if our advantage advantage were not for ever to be facrificed to jours; if we were not to have had a multitude of thofe minor oppreffions, which, together, fwell to a bulk moft burdenfome, to bear from the governors, the judges, the collcctors, and the military, whom you fend us ; if the greateft part of them, at their arrival in ourclimate, were not to have brought with them, blafted characters, ruined fortunes, rapacious hands, and the infolence of fubaltern tyrants, who, tired, in their own country, with obeying laws, come to requite themiclves, in a new world, by the exercife of an arbitrary power. You are the mother country : but fo far from encouraging, you fear our progrefs, bind our hands, and reprefs and ftrangle our growing ftrength. Naturc in favouring us deceives your fecret wifhes; or rather, you would chufe, that we fhould remain in ans eternal childhood, with regard to all that can be ufeful to ourfelves, and that, notwithftanding, we fhould be robuft vaffils, to be employed in your fervice, and in the furnifhing, without remiffion, neiv fources of riches to your infatiable avidity.

$\left[\begin{array}{ll}53\end{array}\right]$

$\left[\begin{array}{ll}54 & ]\end{array}\right.$

Is it this then to be a mother? Is it this to be a country to her children? Ah, in the forefts which furround us, nature has given a gentler inftinct to the favage beaft, which, become a mother, derours not at leaft thofe whom the has produced.

Were all their pretenfions to be acquiefced in, they would foon be bappier then we are. And why not? If you are corrupted, is it necefiary that they muft be corrupted too ? If you have a difpofition to flavery, muft they too follow your example? If they had jou for mafters, why fhould you not confer the property of their country upon another power, upon your fovereign ? Why fhould you not render him their defpot, as you have by a folemn act declared him the defpot of Canada? Would it then be neceffary that they fhould ratify this extravagant conceffion? And even if they fhould have ratified it, muft they obey the fovereign whom you hould have given them, and, if be commanded it, take arms againft you ? The King of England has a negative power. No law can be promulgated without his confent. Why fhould the Amcricans grant him, in their country, a power, of the inconvenience of which you are contimally made fenfible? Should it be, in order one day to diveft him of it, fword in hand, as it will happen to you, if jour govermment be perfected? What advantage do you find in fubjecting them to a vicious conflitution?

[ 55 ]

Ficious or not, this is our conflitution; and it ouglit to be gaserally acknowledgrd and received, by all who bear the Englib name; witllout which, each of our provinces gozerning itfolf in its own wary, bavins its own laws, and pretending to indepeiddance, we ceafe to form a mational body, and ate no more thin a beap of little republies, detacbed, divided, continually rifing agrainft one another, and eafily to be ufurped by a common chomy. The adioit and porverful Pbilip, capable of attempting fucis an chterprize, is at our door.

If he is at your door, he is far from the Americans. A privilege which may have fome inconvenicnce with regard to you, is not the lefs a privilege. But feparated, as they are, from Great Britain by immenfe feas, of what importance is it to you,

$$
E 4
$$

whether

[ $5^{6}$ ]

whether your colonies receive, or reject, your conflitution? What does that make, for, or againft, your power ; for, or againft, your fafety? This unity, of which you exaggerate the advantages, is ftill but a rain pretext. You object your laws to your colonies, when they are harraffed by them; and you tread them under foot, when they make in their favour. You tax yourfelves, and you would tax them. If the leaft attempt is made upan this privilege, you make a furious outcry, fly to arms, and are ready to run on fwords in its defence; and yet, you hold a dagger to the breaft of your countryman, to oblige him to renounce it. Your ports are open to all the world; and you fhut up the ports of your colonifts. Your merchandize is wafted where you pleafe; and theirs muft neceffarily come to you. You manufacture, and you will not fuffer them to manufacture. They have fkins, they have iron; and they muft deliver up to you, unwrought, this iron and thefe fkins. What you acquire at a low price, they muft buy of you at the price which your rapacity impofes.

[ 57 ]

impofes. You offer them up as victims to your traders; and becaufe your India Company was in danger, the Americans muft needs repair their loffes. And yet you call them your countrymen and fellowcitizens; and it is thus that you invite them to receive your conftitution. Go to, go to. This unity, this league which feems fo neceffary to you, is but that of the filly animals in the fable, amongt which you have referved to yourfelves the lion's part.

Perhaps you have not fuffered yourfelves to be drawn to the filling the new world with blood and devaftation but by a falle point of honour. We wifh to perfuade ourfelves that fo many crimes have not been the confequences of a project deliberately formed. You had been told, that the Americans were but a rile herd of cowards, whom the leaft threat would bring, terrified and trembling, to acquiefce in whatever it fhould pleafe you to cract. Inftead of the cowards which had been deferibed and promifed you, you find true men, true Englifhmen, countrymen worthy of yourfelves. Is this a reafon for your being irritated? What! your anceftors admired the Hollander fhaking off the Spanifh yoke; and hould you, their defcendants, be angry or furprized, that your countrymen, your brethren, that they who feel your blood circulate in their veins, fhould rather pour it on the ground and die, than live in yokes and bondage ? A franger, upon whom you flould have formed the fame pretenfions, would have difarmed you, if, fhewing you his naked breaft, he had faid, Plunge in your poignard here, or leave me free: and yet you ftab your brother; and you ftab him without remorfe, becaufe he is your brother! Englifhmen! what can be more ignominious than the favagenefs of a man, proud of his own liberty, and wickedly attempting to deftroy the liberty of another! Would you have us beliere, that the greateft enemy to freedom is the man that is free ? Alas ! we are but too much inclined to it. Enemies of kings, you have their arrogance and pride. Enemies of royal prerogative, you carry it every where. Exery where you fhew jourfelves tyrants. Well then, tyrants of nations, and of your colonies, if in the event you prove the ftrongeft, it will be becaute heaven is deaf to the prayers which are directed to it from all the countries upon earth.

[ $5^{8}$ ]

[ 59.]

Since the feas have not fwallowed up your bluftering ruffians, tell me, what will become of them, if there fhould arife in the new world a man of cloquence, promifing eternal happinefs to the martyrs of liberty who dic in arms. Americans! let your preachers be foen inceflantiy in their pulpits, with crowns of glory in their hands, pointing to heaven open. Priefts of the new world, now is the time for it; expiate the deteftable fanaticifm, which once laid wafte America, by the happy fanaticim, begotten by policy upon freedom. No; you will not deceive your countrymen. To God, who is the principle of juftice and of order, tyrants are abomination. God has imprinted on the heart of man this facred love of liberty; he wills not that flavery disfigure and debafe his nobleft work. If deification be due to man, it is, undoubtedly, to that man who fights and dies for his native foil. Put his image in you: temples; fet it on your altars. It fhall be worhiped by his country. Form a political and religious calendar, marking each day by the name of fome hern, who thall have filled his blood to fet you free. Your pofterity fhall one day read them with holy joy : thefe, thall it fay, behoid, thefe were the men who gave liberty to haif a world; and who, charging themfelves with our happinefs, before we had exiftence, fecured our infant flumbers from the being difturbed and terrified by the clank of chains.

[ 60 ]

When the caufe of your colonies was the part whichEns-argued in your houfes of parliancnt, we Fand thould Thad hare caten, heard fome excellent pleadings pronounced when the when thefer-in their firvour. But that which floould mentration of her oolo- have been addreffed to you perhaps is nics. this :
" I fhall not talk to you, my lords and " gentlemen, of the juftice or injuftice of is your pretenfions. I am not fuch a firan" ger to public affairs as not to know that "this preliminary difcuffion, fo facred in os all the other circumftances of life, wotild

$\left[\begin{array}{ll}61\end{array}\right]$

"s be mifplaced and ridiculous in this. I " fhall not examine what hope you can
" have of fuccecding, or if you are likely " to prove the ftrongelt in the event, tho' "this fubject might, perhaps, appear to
"s you of fome importance, and might, "probably, infure me the honour of your "attention. I will do more. I fhall not "compare the adrantages of your fitua" tion, if you fucceed, with the confe"duences which will follow, if you are " unfortunate. I fhall not afis you how " long you are determined to ferve the " caufe of your enemies. But I will fup"pofe at once, that you have reduced
" your colonies to the degrec of fervitude
" which you have authoritatively required.
"Shew me only how you will fix and keep "them. By a fanding army? But wils
" this army, which will drain you of men
" and money, keep pace, or not keep "pace, with the increafe of population?
" There are but two anfivers to my quef" tion; and, of thefe two anfwers, one
"fecms to be abfurd, and the other brings
" you back to the point at which you are. "I have

[ 62 ]

" I have reflected on it well ; and I have " difcovered, if I am not miftaken, the
" only rational and certain plan which you " have to follow. And it is, as foon as " you fhall be the mafters, to ftop " the progrefs of population; fince it ap.
" pears to you more advantageous, more " honourable, and more becoming, to
" domineer over a fmall number of flaves,
" than to have a nation of freemen for
" your equals and your friends.
" But you will afk me, how is the pro"grefs of population to be ftopped? The s expedient might revolt weak minds, ands
" cowardly fouls; but happily there are " not any fuch in this auguft affembly. It " is, to ftab without pity the greatcft pare
" of thefe vile rebels, and to reduce the "reft of them to the condition of the ne" groes. The high-fpirited and generous
" Spartans, fo extolled in ancient and mo" dern ftory, have fet you the example.
" Like them, and with their faces muffled
" in their cloaks, fhall our fellow-citizens,
" and the bravoes in our pay, go clandern
"tinely, and by night, to maffacre the " childrefs

$\left[\begin{array}{lll}63 & \end{array}\right]$

"children of our Helots, at their fathers ${ }^{*}$ ss fide, and on their mothers' breaft; and " leave alive but fuch a number of them, "as may be fufficient for their labours, " and confiftent with our fafcty."

Engliihmen! you fhudder at this horrible propofition, and you afk what part there is to take. Vanquifhers, or ranquifhed, fee here then what you ought to do. If the rclentment, excited by your cruelties, can be calmed; if the Americans can fhut their eyes to the devaftation which furrounds them; if, in paffing over the ruins of their towns deitroyed by fre, and their fields whitened by the bones of murdered relatives; if, in cirawing-in with every refpiration the focnt of the blood which your hands have on all fides fhed, they can forget the outrages of your defpotifm; if they can prevail upon themfelves to place the leaft confidence in your declarations of contrition, and to believe that you have indecd renounced the injuftice of your pretenfions, begin by recalling your mercenary cutthroats. Reftore freedom to their ports, which you keep thut up; withdran yous fquadrons

[64]

fquadrons from their coafts; and, if there be a wife citizen amongft you, let him take the olive-branch in his hand, prefent himfelf, and fay,
" O you, our countrymen, and our old
" friends; allow us this title; we have,
" profaned it, but our repentance renders
" us worthy to refume it, and we afpire
" henceforward at the glory to preferve it.
"We confefs, in the prefence of this hea" ven, and of this earth, which have been
" confcious of it, we confefs, that our
" pretenfions have been unjuft, our con-
"s duct has been cruel. Let it on each " fide be forgotten. Raife up again your
" fortreffes and your ramparts. Reaffemble
" in your peaccable habitations. Let us
" wafh out the remembrance of every drop
"' of blood that has been filled. We ad" mire the generous firit by which you " have been directed. It is the farne with
" that to which, in fimilar circumfances,
" we have been indebted for our political
" falvation. Yes, it is by thefe marks,
" exprefsly, that we now know you to be
" indeed our countrymen, to be indeed

[ 65 ]

" our brothers, concerning whom we have " verily been guilty; and therefore is this " diftrefs come upon us. You would be " free; be ye free. Be fo, in the whole " extent which we have ourielves given to " this facred name. It is not of us that "s you hold this right. Not unto us, not "s unto us, doth belong the power, by " which it is to be given, or taken away. " You have received it, as we did, from " nature, which the fins and fwords of ty"' rants may oppofe, but which the fins " 6 and fwords of tyrants cannot deftroy. "We lay claim to no fort of fuperiority "s over you. We afpire but at the honour " of equality. This glory is fufficient for " us. We know too well the ineftimable "s value of governing ourfelves, to wifh " henceforward that you fhould be divefted " of the boon. " If, fupreme mafters and arbiters of "' your legiflation, you can create for your " ${ }^{6}$ ftates a better govermment than ours, we " give you anticipated joy. Your happi" ${ }^{6}$ nefs will infpire us with no other fenti"s ment, than the deffre of imitation. F "Fomm

[ 66 ]

" Form for yourfelves conititutions adapt" ed to your climate, to your foil, to this " new world you civilife. Who better
" than yourfelves can know your peculiar
" wants? High-fpirited and virtuous minds,
" like yours, fhould obey but the laws
" which fhall be given them by themfelves.
" All other reftraint would be unworthy
" of them. Regulate your own taxation.
" We defire you only to conform your-" felves to our cuftom in the affeffment of " the duties. We will prefent to you a " ftate of our wants; and you will of your-" felves affign the juft proportion between " your fuccours and your riches.
" Moreover, exercife your induftry, like " us ; without limitation exercife it. A". vail yourfelves of the benefits of nature,
" and of the fruitful countries you inha" bit. Let the iron of your mines, the " wool of your flocks, the fkins of the fa-
" rage animals which wander in your
" woods, fafhioned in your manufactures,
"take a new value from your hands. Be " your ports free. Go, and expofe to
" fale the productions of your lands, and

[67]

" of your arts, in all the quarters of the "s world. Go, and feek for thofe of which " you ftand in need. It is one of our pri"s vileges, let it be likewife yours. The " empire of the ocean, which we have ac" quired by two ages of greatnefs and " glory, belongs as well to you as us. " We fhall be united by the ties of com" merce. You will bring us your pro" ductions, which we fhall receive in pre" ference to thofe of all other people, and " we hope that you will prefer ours to "thofe of forcigners, without being re"s ftrained to it however by any law, bui " that of the common intereft, and the " fair claims of countrymen and friends. " Let the fhips of your country and of "s ours, adorned by the fame freamer, "s overfpread the feas; and let fhouts of " joy arife on each fide, when fifter-veffels " 6 meet each other in the deferts of the " ocean. Let peace fpring up again be" tween us, and concord laft for ever. "We are fenfible at length, that the chain " of mutual benerolence is the only one, " which can bind fuch diftant empires to-

$$
\mathrm{F}_{2} \text { " gether, }
$$

[ 68 ]

" gether, and that every other principle 6s of unity would be precarious and unjuft. " Upon this new plan of eternal amity,
" let agriculture, induftry, laws, arts, and
" the firft of all fciences, that of procur-
"6 ing the greateft good to communities
" 6 and individuals, be perfected amongtt
" you. Let the recital of your happinefs
"6 call around you all the unfortunate of " the earth. Let the tyrants of all coun" tries, let all opprefors, political or fa-
's cred, know, that there exifts upon the " earth a place, where a deliverance from
" their chains is to be found ; where af-
"f flicted, dejected humanity has lifted up
"6 her head; where harvefts grow for the
"s poor; where laws are no more than
"s the fecurity of happinefs; where reli" gion is free, and confcience has ceafed
" to be a flave; where, in fhort, nature
"feems to put in her plea of juftification,
${ }^{6} 6$ for having created man; and govern" ment, fo long time guilty, orer all the " earth, makes at lat the reparation of " its crimes. Let the idea of fuch an
" afylum ferve as a terior and reftraint

[ 69 ]

"s to defpots : for if they have no kindnefs ${ }^{6}$ about their hearts, and look with indiffe"' rence on the happinets of man, they have
" at leaft much avarice and ambition, which "s muft make them anxious to preferve " both their riches and their power. "We ourfelves, O countrymen, O
" friends, we ourfelves fhall profit by your " cxample. If our confticution fhould be " altered for the worfe; if public riches " fhould corrupt the court, and the court " the nation; if our kings, to whom we " have given fo many terrible examples, "s fhould at laft forget them; if we fhould
" be in danger, we who were an auguit
"s people, of dwindling to a vile herd of
"s abjects, by bafcly fetting ourfelses to
" fale; we might be re-animated by the
" fight of your virtues and your laws.
" It might recall to our depraved and
" daftard hearts, with a fenfe of the value
"s and the grandeur of liberty, the energy
" to preferve it. But if it muft be, that
"fuch an example as yours fhall want
" power to prompt us; if it muft be, that
" flasery, the never-failing follower of ve$\mathrm{F}_{3} \quad$ mality,

[ 70 ]

's nality, fhall be, one day, eftablifhed in ${ }^{66}$ that land, which has been inundated "s with blood in the caufe of freedom, s6 which has feen feaffolds erected for the ${ }^{66}$ punifhment of tyrants; then will we ${ }^{6}$ emigrate like your fathers, then will we " abandon, in a body, the ungrateful inle, * delivered up to a defpot, and leave the ${ }^{6}$ monfter, to reign and roar, in a defert
" for domain. Then fhall you furely wel"6 come us as friends, as brothers. You " will fuffer us to partake with you of this ${ }^{6}$ foil, of this air, free as the generous " fouls of their inhabitants, and, thanks " to your virtues, we fhall find again an " England, again a country.
" Such, brave countrymen, are our " hopes, fuch our wifhes. Receive then " our oaths, pledges of fo holy an alliance. "Let us invoke, to ftill add folemnity " to the treaty, let us invoke our common ${ }^{66}$ anceftors, who were all animated by ©s the fpirit of liberty like you, and did
"s not dread to die in its defence. Let es us call to witnefs, the memory of the "illuftrious founders of your colonics,

[ 71 ]

${ }^{6}$ that of your auguft legiflators, of the " philofophic Locke, the firft man upon "t the earth who made a code of tole"r ration, of the venerable Penn, the firft ${ }^{6}$ who founded a city of brethren. The " fpirits of thefe great men, who furely at "s this moment are beholding us with "s earneftnefs and with pleafure, are wor-
" 6 thy to prefide at a treaty, which is about
" 6 to draw the bleffings of peace upon a "double-world. Swear we, in their pre-
's fence; fwear we, upon the very arms,
"s with which you have fo valiantly with-
" ftood us; fwear we, to remain for ever
" 6 united, and for ever true; and when the
"s oath of peace fhall have been pro"' nounced by all, make, of thefe fame
${ }^{6}$ arms, a facred depofite in fome hallowed
"s pile, where the fathers fhall fhew them
" 6 to the generations as they rife; and ${ }^{6}$ there keep them carefully from age to
"s age, in order to their being, one day,
"s turned againft the firft, be he Englifh or ${ }^{6}$ American, who fhall dare propofe the ${ }^{6}$ rupture of that alliance, which is equally

$$
F_{4} \quad \text { u ufeful, }
$$

$\left[\begin{array}{ll}72\end{array}\right]$

"ufeful, equally honourable to both the "s names."

At this difcourfe, I hear the towns, the villages, the fields, all the fhores of North America refound, with livelieft acclamation, with tendereft repetition of the endearing names of brother and of mother, applied to your country and her fons. And whilft the conflagrations of war are fuccceded by bonfires and fports, and every demonftration of a heart-felt triumphant joy, I fee the nations, envious of your power, to ftand aghaft, in filence, aftonifhment, defpair.

Your parliament is about to meet. What is to be expected from it? Will it liften to reafon, or will it perfevere in its madnefs? Will it be the defender of the rights of nations, or the inftrument of the tyranny of minifters? Will its acts be the decrees of a free people, or edicts dictated by the court? I am prefent at the deliberations of your houfes. In thefe revered reforts I hear wifdom fpeak by the mouth of moderation. Soft perfuafion feems to flow there, from the lips of moft diftinguifhed guifhed orators. My heart is filled with hope: my eyes over run with tears. Prefently a voice, the organ of defpotifm and of war, furpends the delicious, fweet emotion.

[ 73 ]

" Englifhmen, cries a mad haranguer, " can you hefitate a moment? It is your "6 rights, it is your moft important inte" refts, it is the glory of your name, that "6 you are called upon to defend. It is "6 not a foreign power which attacks thefe " effential objects. They are menaced by " an interior, domeftic enemy. The dan" ger therefore is more imminent, the " outrage the more fenfible. " Between two rival powers, armed for 6 mutual pretenfions, policy may fome"s times fufpend hoftilities. Againft rebel " fubjects, Пlacknefs is the greateft fault, "s and all moderation weaknefs. The " ftandard of revolt, which was fet up by ${ }^{6}$ audacity, fhould be torn down by power.
" Let the fword of juntice fall heary on "s the hands which dared difplay it. Let " us be expeditious. In thefe cafes there " is a firf moment which muft be feized

[ 74 ]

" on ; revolutions fhould be ftrangled in " their birth. Give not to minds, yet in " amazement, time to grow familiar with "their guilt ; to the ringleaders, time to " confirm their power; nor to the peo" ple, that of leaming to obey new mar" ters. The people, in a revolt, are al" moft always actuated by alien impulies. " Neither their fury, nor their hatred, " nor their love, are properly their own.
${ }^{6}$ You may give them paffions, as eafily as " amms. Difplay to their cyes, the power "s and majefty of the Britifl empire : they " will prefently be falling at your feet;
" and go in an inftant from terror to " compunction, from compunction to obe" dience. If we muft have recourfe to "the feverity of arms, let us have " no fcruples. In civil war, pity is a " moft miftaken virtue. When the fword " is once drawn, it ought not to be flayed, " but by fubmifion. It is for them to
" anfiwer now, to heaven and to carth,
" for the evils which they bring upon " themfelves. Confider that a tranfient
" feverity, in thefe rebellions countrics,

[ 75 ]

ce will infure us peace and obedience that "s will laft for ages.
" In order to make us fufpend our " blows, and difarm our hands, we have " heen told, and told repeatedly, that the
" 6 land is peopled by our countrymen, by "s our friends, by our brethren. What,
" invoke in their favour names which they " have outraged, bands which they have " broken? 'Thefe names, thefe bands, fo " facred, are the very thing that accufes " 6 and attaints them. Since when, were ${ }^{6} 6$ thefe revered titles to impofe duties but "s on us? Since when, had rebellious
" 6 children the right to take arms againft " their mother, defpoil her of her heri"s tage, and rend her heart? 'They talk " of liberty: I refpect this name as much "s as they do; but by this liberty, is it " independance, that we are to under-
"f ftand? Is it the right, to overturn a " legiflation, founded and eftablifhed two
" ages fince? Is it the right, to ufurp " all thofe which we poffefs? They talk " of liberty, but I talk, and will always
" talk,

[ $7^{6}$ ]

"t talk, of the fupremacy, and the fore" reign power, of Britain. " What, fuppofing they had fome caufes " of complaint, fuppofing they intended "s to refufe bearing fome light portion of " the heavy burden under which we ftag" ger, to refufe unreafonably to make "s themfelves partners in our expences, as " we have made them partners in our " greatnefs, had they no other way to do " it, than by revolt and arms? There are " thofe who call them our countrymen, " and our friends; but, for my part, I " can fee them in no other light than " that of the moft cruel perfecutors and " enemies of our country. We had com" mon fathers, it is faid; and fo, undoubt"s edly, we had: but thefe refpectable an" ceftors I myfelf with confidence invoke.
" If their ipirits could here refume their " places, their indignation would not be ${ }^{66}$ inferior to our own. With what wrath
"6 would thefe virtuous citizens then un-
" derftand, that thofe of their children
" who went to fix themfelves beyond the
"feas, no fooner began to be a little 4

[ 77 ]

" confcious of their ftrength, than they ${ }^{6}$ made a traitorous trial of it againft ${ }^{6}$ their country ; armed themfelves againft " her with the very benefits her bounty 's had beftowed? Yes, all; even to that " pacific fect, enjoined ftrietly by their " founder never to dip their hands in " blood; they, who have refpected the " lives and the rights of favage people: " they, who by an enthufiafm of huma" nity, have ftruck off the fetters from " their flaves : now, equally faithlefs to
" their country and their religion, they " arm their hands for flaughter; and it is " againft you. They treat all men as bre" thren; and you, you only, of all peo"s ple, are excluded from the title. They " have fhewn the world that the favages
" of America, that the negroes of Africa,
" 6 are henceforward lefs alien to them than
" the citizens of Britain.
"Arm, then, arm. Britons, ftrike
" home; revenge, revenge, your coun" try's wrong's, your offended rights. Re"s renge the treafon to your greatnefs. Dif-
" play that power, fo redoutable in Eu-
"s rope,

$\left[\begin{array}{ll}78\end{array}\right]$

*rope, in Africa, and the Indies; which
" has fo often aftonifhed America herfelf;
" and fince between a fovereign-people
" and the fubject-people who revolt, there
"s can be no treaty now, but force, let " force decide. Snatch opportunely at
" this world, which is falling from you,
ss and refume it; it is your property,
" which ingratitude and infolence would
" ravifh fron you."
England
determines The fophifms of a fretting, ftrutting tional pride, fupprefs, in the majority of the reprefentatives of the people, the defire of pacific meafures. New refolutions refemble thofe which begot them; but with aggravated features of ferocity and defpotifm. Levies of troops, equipments of fleets. Admirals and generals fet fail for the new world, with orders and projects fanguinary and favage. Nothing lefs than unconditional fubmifion can reftrain or retard the devaftation ordained againft the colonies.

Until this memorable period, the Americans had confined themfelves to a refif-ance, authorized even by the Englifh laws. No other ambition appeared in them, than that of maintaining the very limited rights which they had hitherto enjoyed. Even the leading men amongtt them, who might be fuppofed to have more cnlarged ideas, had not yet rentured to fpeak to the multitude of any thing but an adrantageous accommodation. They would have been afraid, in going further, of lofing the confidence of people attached by habit to an empire, under whofe wings they had profpered. The accounts of the great preparations which were making in the old world, with fetters to confine, or with fire to confume, the new, extinguifhed all remains of affection for the original government. The only bufinefs now, was to give energy to minds ready to receive it. This was the effeet which a work, intituled "Com" mon Senre," produced. We chall give here the fum and fubftance of its doctrine, without tying ourfelves down to its exact form and order.

Never, fays the author of this celebrated performance, never did a more grand concerpment

[ So ]

cernment call for the attention of the worlid. It is not that of a city or a province, it is that of an immenfe continent, and of a confiderable portion of the globe. It is not the affair of a day, it is that of ages. The prefent is about to decide upon a long futurity; and many hundreds of years after that we fhall be no more, the fun, in illuminating this hemifphere, will illuminate our glory, or expofe our fhame. A long time did we fpeak of peace and reconcilement : all is changed. On the day when, in confequence of the recourfe which has been had to arms, the firt drop of blood was fhed, time for difquiftion paffed away. A day has given birth to a revolution. A day has tranfported us to another age.

Timid fouls, fouls who meafure the future by the paft, think that we fand in need of the protection of England. That protection might be ufeful to a rifing colony; it is become dangerous for a nation formed. Infancy muft needs be fupported, in its weak endeavours to walk; youth fhould march actively and frecly; in power and pride of port. The nation, as well as the man, who may have the power and right to protect me, may have the power and will to opprefs me. I give up the fupport of a protector, to be fecured from the fear of a mafter.

[ 81]

In Europe, the people are too much agitated to allow to this part of the world the enjoyment of conftant peace. In thofe courts and nations interefts mect interefts, and joftle without end. As friends of England we muft neceffarily have all her enemies for our own. This alliance will entail upon America the dower of perpetual war. I ct us part, let us part. Neutrality, trade and peace; fuch, and fuch only,s can be the foundations of our greatnefs.

The authority of Great Britain over America muft fooner or later be extinct. So wills nature, neceffity, and time. The Englifh government can, therefore, give us only a tranfient conftitution; and we fhall bequeath to our pofterity but debts, and diffenfions, and a precarious ftate. If we would infure their happinefs, let us part. If we are fathers, if we love ous G chiláren, children, let us part. Laws and liberty are the heritage we owe them.

$\left[\begin{array}{ll}S_{2}\end{array}\right]$

England is too far removed from us; we cannot be governed by fuch a diftant country. What, to traverfe, always, two thoufand leagues, to claim juftice, or to afk for laws! to exculpate ourfelves from imes. ginary crimes, or folicit, with meannefs, the court and minifters of a foreign clime! What, to wait for years for every anfwer ; and to find, as we might too often, when we had croffed and recroffed the ocean, that injuftice only would be the product of our voyage! No; to be a great ftate, the centre and the feat of power muft be in the state itfelf. Nothing but the defpotifm of the Eaft can inure men thus to reccive their laws from rulers far remote, or from the bafhaws, by whom invifible tyrants are reprefented. But let it not be forgotten, that the more the diftance is augmented, the more ponderous and cruel is the preffure of the defpotic power; and the people then, deprived of almoft all thic advantages of government, feel only its miferies and its vices.

$\left[\begin{array}{ll}{[83}\end{array}\right]$

Nature did not create a world to fabject: it to the inhabitants of an ifland. Nature has eftablifhed the laws of equilibrium, which fhe every where obferves; in the heavens as well as upon the earth.' By the laws of bodies, and of diftances, America can belong but to itfelf.

There is no government without a mur tual confidence between him who commands and him who obeys. It is all over ; this mutual confidence is gone; and never can return. England has too clearly fhewn that the would command us like flaves; America, that the was equally fenfible both of her rights and of her ftrength. They have each betrayed their fecret. From this moment there can be no further treaty. It would be figned by hatred and diftruft; hatred, which never pardons; diftruft; which, by its very nature, can never be reconciled.

Would you know what an accommoida tion would produce? Your ruin. You ftand in need of laws; you will not obtain them. Who would give them to you? The Englifh nation? She is jealous of your increafe. The ? He is your enemy. Yourfelves, in your affemblies? Do youz not remember that all legiflation is fubmitted to the negative right of the monarch who would bring you to his yoke? This right would be a formidable right inceffantly armed againft you. Make requefts; they will be eluded. Form pleas of commerce and greatnefs; they will become to the mother-country an object of affright. Your government will be no more than a kind of clandeftine war; that of an enemy who would deftroy without openly attacking; it will be, according to the ordinary courfe of policy, a flow and fecret affaffination, which will caufe langour and prolong weaknefs, and, with the art of an imperial torturer, equally prohibit you to live or dic. Submit to England; and behold your fate.

[ 84 ]

It is not without right that we take arms. Outr right is neceffity, a juft defence, the miferies of ourfelves and of our children, the exceffes committed againft us. Our right is our auguft title of nation. It is for the fword to judge us.

[ 85 ]

The tribunal of war, is the only tribunal which now exifts for us. Well then, fince the fword muft neceffarily be drawn, let us be fure at leaft, that it be for a caufe that may be worthy of it, and requite us for both our treafure and our blood. What, fhall we expofe ourfelves to the feeing our habitations ruined, our lands laid wafte, our families flaughtered, in order to compafs at laft an accommodation; that is, to implore new chains, and cement ourfelves the edifice of our bondage? What, fhall it be by the dreadful light of conflagrations, fhall it be on the tomb of our fathers, or our children, or our wives, that we fhall fign a treaty with our proud oppreffors! and, all covered with our blood, will they deign to pardon us! Ah, we dhould then be but a vile object of pitying wonder to Europe, of indignation to America, and of contempt even to our enemies. If we can obey them, we had not the right to combat them. Liberty only can abfolve us. Liberty, and perfect liberty, is the only objeet worthy of our labours and our dangers. What do.I fay? From this moment it is our own. Our title is written on the bloody plains of Lexington; it was there that the hand of England tore the contract by which we were united to her. Yes. At the moment when the report of the firft mufquet difcharged by England was heard, nature herfelf proclaimed us free and independent.

[. 86 ]

Let us profit by the benefit of foes. The youth of nations is the age moft favourable to their independence. It is the time of energy and vigour. Our fouls are not yet furrounded by that apparatus of luxury, which ferves as hoftage to a tyrant. Our arms are not yet enervated in the arts of foftnefs. Amongft us are not feen to domineer thofe nobles, who, by their very conftitution, are the neceffary allies of kings; who love not liberty, but when they can make of it an inftrument of oppreffion ; thofe nobles, eager for privilege and title, for whom, in critical conjunce tures, the people are but tools, for whom the fupreme power is a ready corruptor.

Your colonies are formed of plain, brave, laborious, upright men, proprietors and cultivators cultivators of their land in one. Liberty is their firft want. Rural labours have al. ready hardened them for war. Public enthufiafm brings to light unknown talents. It is in revolutions that great minds are formed, that heroes fhew themfelves, and take their piace. Remember Holland, and all her fons; and that number of extraordinary men to which the quarrel of her liberty gave birth: behold in thefe men an example for you; remember their fuccefs, and behold a prefage.

[ 87 ]

Let our firft ftep be to form a conftitu= tion by which we may be united. The moment is arrized. Later, it would be abandoned to an uncertain futurity and the caprice of chance. The more people and riches we fhall acquire, the more barriers will there be raifed up between us, Then, how fhali fo many provinces and interefts be made confiftent? For fuch an union, it is neceffary that each people fhould at once be fenfible, both of the particular weaknefs, and the general ftrength. There muft be great calamities or great fears. It is then, amongf communities as amongft G4 individuals, individuals, that fpring up thofe firm and vigorous friendfhips which affociate fouls with fouls, and interefts with interefts. It is then, that one fpirit, breathed from every part, forms the genius of ftates; and that all the fcattered powers become by union a fingle and a formidable power. Thanks to our perfecutors, we are at this epocha. If we have courage, it will be that of our happinefs. Few nations have laid hold of the favourable moment to form their government. Once efcaped, this moment retums no more; and anarchy or flavery punifhes the neglect of it for ages. Let not a fimilar fault prepare for us fimio lar regret. Regret is impotent.

[ 88 ]

Let the moment, which, in refpect to us, is fingular, be feized on. We have it in our power to frame the fineft conftitution that the world has feen. You have read in your facred books how mankind were deftroyed by the general deluge. A fingle family furvived, and was commanded by the Supreme Being to re-people the carth. We are this family. Defpotifm has has deluged all ; and we can a fecond time renew the world.

[ 89 ]

We are about, at this moment, to decide the fate of a race of men more numerous perhaps than all thie people of Europe put together. Shall we wait till we may be the prey of a conqueror, and fuffer the hope of the univerfe to be deftrojed? Imagine to yourfelves, that all the generations of the world to come, have at this moment their eyes fixed on us, and demand of us their liberty. We are about to fix thair deftiny. If we give them up, they will, perhaps, one day, drag their chains acrofs our tombs, and load them with imprecations.

Call to mind a writing which has appeared amongtt you, and had for a motto, Unite or die.

Let us unite then, and began by declaring our Independence. That alone can efface the name of rebellious fubjects, which our infolent oppreffors have dared to give us. Tlat alone can make us rife up to the disnity which is our due, infure us allies amengt the powers, imprefs refpect cron upon our enemies, and, if we treat with them, give us the right to treat, with the power and majefty which becomes a nation,

[ 90 ]

But I repeat it ; we muft be quick, Our uncertainty makes our weaknefs. Let un dare to be free, and we are fo. Ready to take the leap, we draw back. We read the countenances of each other with anzious curiofity: It feems, as if we were altonifhed at our own boldnefs, and that our very courage gave us fear. But it is not now the time to be mufing on calculations. It is paffed. In grear affairs, in which there is but one great part to take, too much circumfpection ceafes to be prudence. Erery thing that is extreme, demands refolution in the extrome. Then, the boldeft meafures are the wifeft; and the excefs of boldnefs itfelf becomes the means and the warrant of fuccers.
The calo-
nesicheral Such was the fubftance of the fentiments the ies which unit- difplayed in this work: They confrmed $\substack{\text { ed then to } \\ \text { Engrad }}$ in their principles the enterprizing fpirits and devtare who had long required a total feparation themifires ind in in ine. from the mother-country. The timid ciof ler. tizens, who had been wavering till ther,

[ 9r ]

now declared decifively for this great and interefting rupture: The votaries of independance were numerous enough to bring the general congrefs, on the ath of July, 17?6, to the determination to pronounce it.

Why have I not received the genius and the cloquence of the celebrated orators of Athens and of Rome! With what grandcur, with what enthufiafm, fhould I not fpeak of thofe generous men who erected this grand edifice, by their patience, their wifdom, and their courage! Hancock, Franklin, the two Adamfes, were the greateft actors in this affecting fcene: but they were not the only ones. Pofterity fhall know them all. Their honoured names fhall be tranfinitted to it by a happier pen than mine. Brafs and marble 1sall fhew them to remoteft ages. In beholding them, fhall the friend of freedom feel his heart palpitate with joy, feel his eres floating in delicious tears. Under the but of one of then has been writein; He wrested THUNDER FROM HEATEN AND THE SCE TVE erom tyrants *. Of the laft words of this culogy fhall all of them partake.

[ 92 ]

Heroic country, my advanced age persnits me not to vifit thee. Never fhall I fee myfelf amongft the refpectable perfonages of thy Areopagus; never fhall I be prefent at the deliberations of thy congrefs. I flall die without having feen the retreat of toleration, of manners, of laws, of virtue, and of freedom. My afhes will not be covered by a free and holy earth : but I fhall have defired it; and my laft breath fhall bear to heaven an ejaculation for thy profperity.

Though America might be affured of univerfal approbation, fhe thought it incumbent on her to expofe to the eyes of the world the motives of her conduct. She publifhed her manifento, in which we read that,
" The hiftory of the Englifh nation and " its king will fhew to the fucceeding ge" neiations, whom it fhall entertain and in-

* Eripuit calo fulmen, fceptrumque tyrannis, is the line applied to the great Elcectrician ; and the tranflator dares not criticife a line which his mafter has thought worthy to be ftudded in his work.

[ 93 ]

"fluct with accounts of them and us, a " feries of ourrages and of ufurpations, " which vied with each other in their " tendency to eftablifh abfolute tyranny " in thefe provinces.
" It will thew, that the monarch refufed
" his confent to laws the moft falutary and
" the moft neceffary to the public good.
" That he removed the affemblics to " inconvenient places, at a diftance from
" all records, in order to bring the depu" ties more eafily to his views.
" That he had frequently diffolved the " affembly of reprefentatives, becaufe they " had firmly defended the people's rights. "That, after fuch diffolution, he had left
" the ftates too long without reprefenta-
" tives, and confequently expofed to the " inconveniences refulting from the want
"s of affemblies.
" That he endeavoured to hirder po.
" pulation, by raifing difficulties to the "s naturalization of foreigners, and by fell-
"s ing the lands, of which he granted the " property, too dear.
" That he made the judges too depen" dant on himelf, by decreeing that they
" fhould

[ 94 ]

"c flould hold but of him alone; bath " their offices and their falaries:
" That he created new employments, "6 and filled this country with a multitude " of place-men, who devoured our fub. " ftance and difturbed our quiet. " That he maintained amorgft us, in " time of profound peace, a confiderable " number of troops, without the confent "\% of the legiflative power:
" That he rendered military power in" dependent of, and even fuperior to, the " civil power:
" That he contrived all meanis, in con" junction with perverfe men, to quarter " armed foldiers in our houfes, and exempt
" them from the pains due to the murders
" they might commit in America; to de-
" ftroy our trade in all parts of the world;
" to impofe taxes on wis without our con--
" fent; to deprive us, in many caies, of
" our trials by juries; to tranfport us,
" and make us take our trials, beyond
" the feas; to take away our charters,
" fupprefs our beft laws, to alter the ${ }^{6}$ foundation and the form of our govern" ment

[ 95 ]

 " own legiflation, and make us receive " other laws.
"That he himfelf abrlieated his gov " vermment in the American provinces; " by declaring us fallen from his protec"tion, and by making war upon us.
" That he caufed our coafte to be ras "vaged, our perts to be deftroyed, our " towns to be burnt, our people to be s maflacred.
" That he forced thofe who were taken "prifoners upon the high feas, to boas " arms againft their country, to become " the executioners of their friends and bre" thren, or to perim themelves by hands " fo dear.
" That he excited amongft us intcftine 6 divifions; and that he endearoured to " raife againtt our peaceable inhabitants, "the barbarous favages, accuftomed to " $\sigma^{-}$maffacre all, without diftinction of ranlw, ss fex, and age.
" That at this time there arrised on "s our ihores forcign mercenaries, com" miffioned

$\left[\begin{array}{l}9^{6}\end{array}\right]$

" miffioned to compleat the work of dc-
" vaffation and death.
"And that a prince, whofe character " was thus marked by all the features of " tyranny, was not fit to govern a free " people."

A ftep which broke the tics formed by blood, by religion, and by habit, was to be fupported by a grand concert of wills, by wife and vigorous meafures. The United Gtates of America gave themfelves a federate conftitution, which joined, to the interior advantages of republican government, all the power of monarchy.

Each province had an affembly formed by the reprefentatives of the different diftricts, and in which the legiflative power refided. The executive power was committed to its prefident. His rights and his obligations were, to liften to every application from any of the pcople; to call them together when circumftances might require it ; to provide for the arming and fubfifting troops, and concert the operations of them with their officers. He was at the head of a fecret committee, which was to hold hold a continual correfpondence with the general congreís. The time of his continuance in office was limited to two years. But the laws permitted a prolongation of it.

[ 97 ]

The provinces were not obliged to render an account of their adminiftation to the great council of the nation, though compofed of the deputies of all the colonics. The fuperiority of the general congrefs over the particular congreffes was confined to matters relative to politics and war.

But fome people have thought that the inftitution of this body was not fo well contrived as the legiflation of the provinces. It feems, it muft be confeffed, that federate ftates, which raife themfelves from the condition of fubjects up to that of being independent, cannot without danger truft their delegates with the unlimited power of making peace and war. For thefe delegates, fhould they be corrupt or ill informed, might bring back the whole fate to the bondage which it is feeking to efcape from. It feems, that in thefe times of reH volution, volution, the public will cannot be too well known, too literally pronounced. It is neceffary, undoubtedly, they fay, that all the meafures, all the operations, which relate to the common defence and offence, thould be decided on by the common reprefentatives of the body of the ftate: but the continuation of war, and the conditions of peace, ought to be deliberated upon in every province; and the deliberations to be tranimitted to the congrefs by the depuries, who would fubmit the opinion of their provinces to the plurality of voices. In thort, they add, that if in eftablifhed governments it is proper that the people fhould rely with confidence in the wifdom of their fenate, in a ftate where the conftitution is forming, where the people, as yet uncertain of their fate, call for their liberty, fword in hand, it is neceffary that all the citizens fhould be continually in council, in camp, in the public places, and have their eyes continually open upon the reprefentatives to whom their deftiny has been committed.

[ $9^{8}$ ]

Though

[ 99 ]

Though thefe principles are true in general, there might be a difficulty, we may anfiwer, in applying them to the new republic formed by the Americans. It is not with that republic as with the federate republics which we fee in Europe, I mean Holland and Switzerland, which occupy a: country but of fimall extent, and in which it is eafy to eftablifh a rapid communication between all the provinces. The famething may be faid of the confederacies of ancient Greece. Thefe ftates were fituated at a fmall diftance from each other, confined almoft within the narrow compafs of the Peloponnefus, or, at moft, within the limits of the Achipelago. But the United States of America, difperfed over an immenfe continent; occupying in the new world a fpace of almoft fifteen degrees; feparated by deferts, by mountains, by gulfs, and by a vaft extent of coaft, cannot have the advantage of this rapid communication. If the general congrefs could not decide upon political interefts without the particular deliberations of eacis province; if on every important occafion, on

$$
\mathrm{H}_{2}
$$

[ 100 ]

every unforefeen event, it fhould be neceffary to give new inftructions, and, as we may fay, a new power to the reprefentatives, this body would remain inactive. The diftances to be paffed, the delays and the multitude of debates, might too often be hurtful to the public good.

Befides, it is never at the birth of a conftitution, and amidft the great fermentations of liberty, that there is caufe to fear that a body of reprefentatives fhould, either from weaknefs or corruption, betray the, interefis with which they are entrufted. It is rather in fuch a body that the general firit is both exalted and inflamed. In that refides, in its vigour, the genius of the nation. Chofen by the efteem of their fellow-citizens, cholen at a time when every public function is a danger, and every vote an honour, placed at the head of thofe who will compofe for ever that celebrated areopagus, and thence even naturally carried to regard the public liberty as their own work, they cannot but have the enthufiafm of founders, who make it their pricie to have their names engraved confpicuouny,

$$
\left[\begin{array}{lll}
{[ } & 101 & ]
\end{array}\right.
$$

to be read by diftant ages, on the frontifpiece of an auguft monument which is rifing. The fears which the partifans of the contrary fyftem might have upon this object, feem therefore to have fmall foundation.

I will fay more. It might happen that a people who are fighting for liberty, fatigued with a long and painful ftruggle, and more ftruck with the prefent danger than the future good, might feel their courage failing, and perhaps, one day, be tempted to prefer dependence and peace to independence and tumult, attended with peril and with blood. Then would it be adrantageous to this pcople to have divefted themfelves of the power of making peace with their oppreffors, and depofited it in the hands of the fenate which they had chofen to ferve as an organ to their will, when this will could fhew itfelf with freedom, pride, and courage. Ii feems as if each individual, when he had given his roice for the inftituting fuch a fenate, fhould fay to it, I raife the ftandard of war againft my tyrants. If my arm fhou'd weary in the war, if I could debafe myfelf fo low as to implore repoíe, fupport me againft my weaknefs. Liften to no prayer or wifh unworthy of me, which I difavow beforehand; and pronounce not the name of peace until my bonds be broken.

[ 102 ]

In reality, if we confult the hiftory of republics, we fhall fee, that the multitude have almoft always great impetuofity and heat at the firft moment ; but that it is only in a fmall number of chofen men, and qualified to ferve as chiefs, that refide thofe conftant and vigorous refolutions which march, with a fteady, firm, undaunted ftep, towards fome great and worthy end, never turning, or looking, from the path, and never ceafing, moft ftubbornly to combat all obftructions that they meet with, from fortune, from mifery, and from man. England.

However it be; and whatfoever fide may be taken in this political difcuffion, the Americans had not yet created for themfelves a fyftem of government, when in the month of March, Hopkins plundered the Inland of Providence of a large train of artillery and a confiderable quantity of ammunition; when in the beginning of May, Carleton drove out of Canada the Provincial troops, which were employed to reduce Quebec with a view of completing the conqueft of that important territory; when in the month of June Clinton and Parker had been fo vigorounly repulfed on the Southern coafts of America. Far greater fcenes followed the declaration of independence.

[ 103 ]

Howe had been appointed to fuperfede the feeble Gage: and it was this new general who had evacuated Boiton. Having arrived on the 2d of April at Halifax, on the soth of June he departed for Staten Ifland. The forces, which were to act both by fea and land, fucceffively joined him according to expectation; and on the 28th of Auguft he landed on Long-Ifland without oppofition, under the protection of a Fleet commanded by the admiral his brother. The Americans exhibited as little fpirit in defending the interior part of their country as they did on the landing of the enemy.

[ 104 ]

After a very feeble refiftance, and confiderable lofs, they took refuge on the continent with a facility, which would hardly have been granted them by a conqueror, who knew how to avail himfelf of the advantages he had obtained. The city of New-York too was abandoned by thefe new republicans with ftill greater precipitation than they had evacuated LongInland: and they filed off towards Kingfbridge, where they appeared determined to make an obftinate refiftance.

If the Englifh had followed up their fuccefs with that vivacity which circumftances demanded, the new-raifed troops which had oppofed them had infallibly been difperfed, or reduced to the neceffity of laying down their arms. On the contrary; they were allowed fix wecks to recover from their confternation : nor did they abandon their intrenchments till the night of the firft or fecond of November, when the movements, which were making in their view, were fufficient to convince them that their camp was upon the point of being attacked.

Their

[105]

Their commander in chief, Wafhington, was unwilling to truft the fate of his country to an action, which might and naturally would have terminated to the prejudice of thofe important interefts which had been committed to him. He knew, that delays, ever farourable to a native, are cver fatal to a ftranger. This conviction determined him to retire to the Jerfeys with a defign of protracting the war. Favoured both by the inclemency of the feafon, by his knowledge of the country, and by the nature of the ground, which compenfated in fome meafure for the want of difcipline, he had reafon to flatter himfelf, that he fhould be able to cover the greate it part of this fertile province, and keep the enemy at a diftance from Penfylvania. In a moment, however, he fees his colours abandoned by the foldiers, whofe engagement, at the end of fix, and even at the end of three months, had expired : and of an army of twenty-five thoufand men, there farce remained two thoufand five hundred, with which he was fortunate enough to retire beyond the Delawar.

[ 106 ]

Without lofing a moment, the King's troops ought to have paffed the river in purfuit of this handful of fugitives, and have put them totally to the rout. If the five thoufand men, deftined for the conqueft of Rhode-Ifland, had gone up the river in the tranfports they were aboard of, the junction of the two corps might have been effected without oppofition even in Philadelphia iteelf, and the new republic had been fifled in that important and celebrated city which gave it birth.

At this time, perhaps, reproaches were caft on the Englifh general for being timid and too circumfpect in the operations of thic campaign. Certain it is, however, that he was rafh enough in the diftribution of his winter-cantonments. They were difpofed in fuch a manner, as if there remained not in America a fingle individual, who had either inclination or power to moleft them.

This prefumption encouraged the militia of Pennfylvania, Maryland and Virginia, collected together and reunited for the fupport of the common caufe.

$\left[\begin{array}{ll}107\end{array}\right]$

On the $25^{\text {th }}$ of December they croffed the Delaware, and fell accidentally upon Trenton, which was occupied by fifteen hundred of the twelve thoufand Heffians, fold in fo bafe a manner, by their avaricious mafter, to the King of Great Britain. This corps was maffacred, taken, or entirely difperfed. Eight days after three Englifh regiments were in like manner driven from Prince-town, but after having better fupported their reputation than the foreign troops in their pay.

Thefe unexpected events reduced the enemies of America, in the Jerfey's, to the neceffity of confining their pofts to Amboy and Brunfivick, where yet they were exceedingly harraffed during the remainder of the winter.

The effect of ftrong paffions, and of great dangers, is often to aftonifh the mind, and to throw it into that kind of torpor that deprives it of the ufe of its powers; by degrees it recovers and collects itfelf: all its faculties, fufpended for a moment, difplay themfelves with redoubled rigour: svery fpring of action is awakened, and it feels its powers rife at once to a level with the difficulties it has to encounter. In a great multitude there are always fome who feel this immediate effeet, which rapidly communicates itfelf to others. Such a revolution took place amongft the confederate ftates. It caufed armed men to iffue from all quarters.

[ 108 ]

It was very late before the campaign of 1777 was opened. The Englifh army, in defpair of penetrating into Penfylvania. by way of the Jerfeys, at laft embarked on the 23 d of July, and, by the bay of Chefapeak, landed in a country which their generals may very juflly be reproached for not having invaded the year before. Their march is uninterrupted, till they reach Brandywine. There, on the IIth of September, they attack and beat the Americans, and arrive on the 30 th at Philadelphia, which had been abandoned on the 25 th by the Congrefs, and a few days later or fooner by the greateft number of the inhabitants.

This victory is attended with no confequances. The conqueror fees nothing around around him but hatred and devaftation. Pent up in a fpace extremely circumfcribed, he meets with infurmountable obftacles in extending himfelf over an uncultivated country. Even his gold affords him not its ufual refources in the neighbouring diftricts, nor is there a poffibility of any fupplies, but what muft neceffirily crofs the feas. The irkfomenefs of an imprifonment of nine months duration, determined him to regain New York by way of the Jerfeys; and under the command of Clinton, fucceffor to Howe, this long and dangerous retreat was effected, without fuftaining fo much lofs as a more experienced enemy would have occafioned.

[ 109 ]

While the Englifh were wafting away their time in Penfylvania, an important fcene opens itfelf in the more northern part of America. In the month of May, 1776 , Carleton had driven the provincials out of Canada, and in October deffroyed the armed floops which they had conftructed oin the Lake Champlain. This fuccefs drew Burgoyne to 'Ticonderago, in the month of July in the following year. At his approach, a garrifon, confifting of four thoufand men, abandoned this important poft, with the lofs of their rear-giard, their artillery, and ammunition.

[ 110 ]

The Englifh general was naturally pre* fumptuous. A weakneis fo extracidinary increafed his arrogance. He had conceived the defign of reuniting the troops of Canada with thofe of New York by Hudfon's-bay. This project was bold and great.. Had he fucceeded he would have cut North America in two, and, perhaps, have ended the war. But, to have had fuccefs; it would, have been neceffary, that whilf one army was going down, the other fhould have gone up, the river. Having failed in this idea, Burgoyne ought to have feen, from the very firft fteps of it, that his enterprize was chimerical. At every march it became more and more fo. His communications grew more diftant ; his provifions lefs abundant. The Americans, taking heart again, affembled from all parts round him. At length this unlucky body of men found themfelves caught, on the 13 th of October, at Saratoga; and nations learned with aftonifhment, niffment, that fix thoufand of the beft difciplined troops of the old hemifphere, had laid down their arms before the hufbandmen of the new, conducted by the fortunate Gates. Thofe who remembered that the Swedes, under Charles the Twelfth, till then invincible, had capitulated before the Ruffians, yet uncivilized, did not accufe the Englifh troons, but only blamed the imprudence of their general.

[ 111 ]

This event, fo decifive in the opinion of our politicians, was of no greater confequence than that with which other actions, lefs favourable to the American arms, had been attended. After three years of fighting, maffacre, and devaftation, the ftate of things was farcely changed from what it had been a fortnight after the commencement of hoftilities. Leet us endearour to difcover the caufes of fo ftrange a fingularity.

Great Britain, accuftomed to florms at Why the Englith home, faw not at firft all the danger there not fuced might be in the tempeft which was rifing in her remote poffeffions. For a long time her troops had been infulted at Bofton; an authority, independent of hers, had been formed in the province of Maffachufet. The other colonies were making difpofitions to follow this example, had not the adminiftration taken thofe great objects into their ferious confideration. When they were laid before parliament, both houfes were filled with clamour ; and much dechmation followed, after much declamation that had gone before. The fenate of the nation decreed at laft, that the country which was rebellious to its decrees, fhould by force be made obedient: but this violent refolution was executed with the flownefs too frequent in flates of freedom.

$-[112-]$

England thought, in general, that coafts without defence, that countries entircly open, could not refilt her fleets and armies. It did not appear to her that this expedition could be of fufficient duration to give time to the peaceful huibandmen of America to learn the art of war. It was forgotten that the climate, the rivers, the defiles, the fwamps, the want of provifion, in proportion as advances were made into the country, and an infinity of other natural obftructions, tions, militating againft a rapid progrefs in a region three-fourths uncultivated, Thould have made a part of the calculation.

[ II 3 ]

Succefs was ftill more retarded by the influence of moral caufes.

Great Britain is the region of party. Her kings have generally feemed to be well enough convinced of the neceflity of learing public affairs to the management of the prevailing faction, by which they were conducted commonly with intelligence and with vigour, becaufe the principal agents of which it was compofed were animated by a common intereft. Then, to public fpirit, which reigns more in England than in any other government of Europe, was added the power of a faction, and that fpirit of party which moves men's minds fo powerfully, becaufe it is always the effect of paffion. To rid himfelf of this reftraint, George the Third compofed his council of detached, unconnected members. This innovation was not attended with any very great inconveniences, as long as cuents rolled round in their common courfe. But as foon as a war with America had complicated a machine, which was not before too fimple, it was perceived that it had neither that ftrength, nor that union, which are fo neceffary for the execution of great affairs. The wheels, too far afunder, wanted, as we may fay, a centre of motion, and a common impulfe. They went fluggifhly and precipitately, by turns. The adminiftration too much refembled that of an ordinary monarchy, when the principle of action proceeds not from the head of an intelligent and actire monarch, who brings together all the fprings under his own hand. There was no longer any integrity or wholenefs in what was undertaken, nor was there more of it in what was executed.

[ 114 ]

A miniftry, without harmony and coricord, was expofed to the inceffantly renewed attacks of a body of encmies, united, clofe, and firm. Its refolutions, be they what they would, were fure to be combated by reafoning or by ridicule. It was re proached for having been fevere with the diftant members of the fate, as it would have been reproached for haring been too tender to them. Even they, who in parliament were the moft outrageous againft the treatment which had been fhewn to the Americans ; they who moft encouraged them to refiftance; they who, perhaps, fecretly fent them fuccour, were as averfe to their independence as the very minifters whom they laboured, without ceafing, to remove or vilify. Could the oppofition have fucceeded in difgufting the king with his confidents, or have obtained the facrifice of them by the cry of the nation, the project of fubjugating America had ftill been followed, but with more dignity, more force, and perhaps with meafures better planned. As the reduction of the revolted provinces was not to be their work, they rather wifhed that this immenfe part of the Britifh empire might be feparated from it, than that it fiould be reunited to by any other hands than theirs.

[ 115 ]

The activity of the generals repaired not the vice of thefe contraricties, and the delays in confequence. They indulged the foldier with too long repofe; they employed in meditating, the time for acting; they I 2 approashed.

[ 116 ]

approached new-raifed men with the pre caution they would have taken before veteran troops. The Englifh, who have fo much impetuofity in party, are of a cool and calm character in other things. 'They are to be agitated but by violent pafions. When this fpring is wanting, they move flow enough to count their fteps. Then they govern themfelves by the temper of their mind, which, in general, if we except the arts of imagination and tafte, is, in every thing elfe, methodical and wife. In war, their valour never lofes fight of principles, or leaves much to chance. Rarely do they leave, cither on their flanks, or in their rear, any thing which may give them trouble. This fyftem has its advantages, particularly in a clofe and narrow country, in a country fet thick with ftrong holds and fortified towns. But in the prefent circumftances, and upon the vaft continent of America, againft a people who fhould not have had time allowed them for their being fortified, or inured to war, the perfection of the art, perhaps, had been to have forgot it, and to fubfitute, in its ftead, the rapid and impetwous march, and the mighty darings which at once aftonifh, ftrike, and overcome. It was in the firft moments, above all, that it would have been neceffary to imprefs upon the Americans, not the terror of fuch ravages as affect a peonle, armed for their liberty, more with inciignation than with fear; but that dreat which is ftruck from a fuperiority of talents and of arms, and which a warlike people, of the old world, fhould naturally be fuppofed to carry to the new. The confidence of rictory had foon been rictory itfelf. But by too much circumfpeetion, by their too fervile attachment to rules and principles, fkilful leaders failed of rendering to their country the fervice it expected from them, and which it was juftified in expecting.

[ 117 ]

The troops, on their fide, did not prefs their commanders to lead them on. They were juft come from a country, where the caufe which had fent them acrofs the ocean, made no impreffion. It was, in the eyes of the people, but a broil which could not be of any confequence. They confounded the debates it occafioned in parliament with other debates, often of fmall importance. It was not talked of ; or if fome perfons entertained themfelves with it, they were not more earneft about it than about thofe pieces of news, which, in great cities, occupy the idlenefs of every day. The indifference of the nation had communicated itfelf to the defenders of its rights. They would even have been afraid, perhaps, to gain too decifiye advantages over countrymen, who had taken arms but to keep themfelves from chains. In all the monarchies of Europe, the foldier is but an inftrument of defpotifm, and has its difpofition. He loaks upon himfelf as belonging to the throne, and not to the country ; and a hundred thoufand armed men, are but a hundred thoufand difciplined and formidable flaves. The habit even of exercifing the empire of force, that empire to which all gives way, contributes to extinguif in them every fpark of the lore of liberty. At length, the military government and fubordination, which moves thoufands of arms by a fingle voice, which permits permits no afking, nor feeing, nor judging, nor thinking ; and, at the firft fignal, makes it a law to kill or dic, compleats the work of changing thefe fentiments into principles, which make what may be called the morals of their ftate. It is not fo in England. The influence of the conflitution is fo great, that it extends itfelf even to the troops. There, a man is a citizen before he is a foldier. Public opinion, conforming itfelf to the conftitution, honours one, and lightly regards the other, of thefe titles. Thus we fee by the hiftory of the revolutions anci tempefts by which that turbulent ifland has been torn, that the Englifh foldier, tho' enlifted for life, preferves for political liberty a paffion, of which an idea is not cafily to be formed in our countries of flaves.

$\left[\begin{array}{ll}118\end{array}\right]$

[ 119 ]

How fhould the ardour which was wanting in the Britifh troops have animated the Heflians, the Brunfwickers, and the other Germans ranking under the fame banners, all equally difcontented with the princes who had fold them, difcontented with the fovereign who had bought them, difeontented with the nation which paid their wages, and difcontented with their comrades, who treated their mercenarinefs with contempt? Befides, they had alfo brothers in the enemy's camp, to whom they dreaded to give death, and from whofe hand a wound would have grieved them with a double pain.

[ 120 ]

The fpirit of the Englifh army had been altered too, in confequence of a revolution in the manners of their country, which had taken place about fifteen or eightecn years before. The fucceffes of the laft war; the extenfion which the peace had given to commerce; the great acquifitions made in the Eaf Indies: all thefe means of fortune had, without interruption, accumulated in Great Britain prodigious riches. Thefe riches kinded the defire of new enjoyments. The great went to acquire them in foreign countries, and, above all, in France; and brought home the poifon to their country. From the higher conditions, it flowed down into all the claffes, even to the loweft. To a chazafter of piaininefs, fimplicity, referve, and haughtinefs, fucceeded a tafte for exterior

[ 121 ]

terior fhew, for diffipation, gallantry, and what is called politenefs. Travellers who had formerly vifited this ifland fo renowned, thought themfelves in another climate. The contagion had fpread to the troops. They carried with them to the new hemifuhere the paffion which they had contracted in the old, for gaming, for foft accommodation, and good living. In departing from their coaft, they fhould have renounced the fuperfuities of which they were enamoured. This tafte for luxury, this ardour, fo much the more violent as it was new, did not encourage them to purfue, into the interior part of the country, an enemy ever ready to plunge into it for fhelter. Ye new politicians who advance with fo much confidence that manners have no influence on the fate of nations, that, with regard to them, the meafure of greatnefs is that of riches; that the pleafures of peace and the voluptuoufnefs of the citizen cannot weaken the effect of thofe great machines called armies, and of which the European difcipline has, according to your account, fo perfected the infallible and tremendous tremendous operations: you, who to fup. port your opinion, muft turn away your eyes from the afhes of Carthage and the ruins of Rome, upon the recital I am making to you, furpend your judgment, and believe it poffible that there may be opportunitics of fuccefs which are loft by luxury. Believe, that, even to courageous troops, independence on wants has been often the chief caufe of conqueft. It is too eafy perhaps to brave only death. For nations corrupted by opulence a feverer trial is referved, that of fupporting the lofs of their pleafures.

[ 122 ]

Add to all thefe reafons, that the means of war feldom arrived, acro's fuch a length of fea, in the convenient feafon for action. Add, that the councils of Gearge the Third were wifly determined to have too much influence in military operations which were to be exccuted at fuch a diftance from them; and you will know the greateft part of the obitacles by which the ruinous efforts of the mother-country againf the freedom of her colonies were oppofed.

But

[ 123 ]

But how happened it that America did Why the not herfelf repulfe from her fhores thefe provineus Europeans who were bringing to her chains deced ind dri or death?

This new world was defended by regu continent lar troops, which at firft had been enlifted but for three or fix months, and afterwards for three years, or as long as hoftilities might continue. It was defended by citizens who took the field only when their particular province was invaded or menaced. Neither this army always on foot, nor this militia cafually aficmbled, had a military turn. They were farmers, traders, lawyers, exercifed only in the arts of peace, and conducted to danger by guides as little verfed as their fubalterns in the very complicated fcience of war. In this fate of things, what hope could they have of meafuring themfelves with adrantage againft veterans in difcipline, formed to erolutions, inftructed in tactics, and abundantly provided with all the inftruments neceffary to a vigorous attack, to an obftinate defence?

Enthufafm

[ 124 ]

Enthutiafm alone might have furmounted thefe difficulties: but did thore in wality exift more enthufarm in the colomies than in the mother-country?

The general opinion in England, was, that the parliament had effentially the right of taxing every country which made a part of the Britifh empire. Perhaps, in the beginning of the troubles, not a hundred individuals were to be found who would hare called this authority in queftion. Yet no anger was excited by tine refural of the Americans to acknowledge it. No hatred Was bome towards them, even after they had taken arms in fupport of their pretenfroms. As the labours of the people in the intrior part of the kingdom were not affreted by it, as the form mummured but at diftance, every one was peaceably occupiod with his bufnefs, ar gave himfelf up widhate difurbance to his pleafures. They $2 \mathrm{~T}_{1}$ wated for the conclufion of the drama Without impartence, as if alscady cortain of what was to be exhibited in the unraWeling of the plot.

[ 125 ]

The ferment muft be fuppofed to have Shewn itfelf at firlt much grater in the new hemifphere than the old. Is ever the odious name of tyranny, or the gratefur found of independance, pronounced to nations without communicating to them that warmth which produces motion? But dixt that warmth fuftain itfelf? Had the first wehemence of imagination lafted, muft now the repreffing of exceffes have occupied the attention of the new authority? But fo far from having caufe to withhold courage, it had cowardice to purfue. It was feen to punifh defertion with death, ftaining the ftandard of liberty with blood. It was feen to refufe admitting of an exchange of prifoners, for fear of augmenting the inclination of the troops to furrender at the firf fummons. It was feen reduced to the neceffity of crecting tribu. nals for the profecution of the generals of their lieutenants who fhould too cafily give up the pofts which their vigilance was to guard. It is truc, that a hoary patriot, of fourfcore years, who was defired to returna © 1 ) his fire fide, cried out, My death sitil be of ufe; I hall /bield with my body a younger man. It is true, that Putnam faid to a royalift his prifoner, Return to thy commander, and if he afks thee bow many troops 1 bave, tell bim, tbat I bave enough; that, cven if be 乃ould beat them, I 乃ould have fill enough; and that he roill find, in the event, that I bave too nany for him and for the tyronts whom he ferves. Thefe fentiments were heroic, but they were rare ; and they became lefs common every day.

[ 126 ]

The intoxication was never general; and it could be but momentaneous. None of thofe encrgetic caufes, which have produced fo many revolutions upon the globe, exifted in North America. Neither religion nor laws had there been outraged. The blood of martyrs or patriots had not there ftreamed from fcaffolds. Morals had not been there infulted. Manners, cuftoms, habits, no object dear to nations had there been the fport of ridiculc. Arbitrary power had not there torn any inhabitant from the arms of his family and his friends, to drag him to a dreary dungeon. Public order had not been there inverted. The principles principles of adminiftration had not veen changed there; and the maxims of government had there always remained the fame. The whole queftion was reduced to the knowing whether the mother-country had, or had not, the right to lay, directly, or indirectly, a flight tax upon the colonies: for the accumulated grievances in the manifefto were valid only in confequence of this leading grievance. This, almoft metaphyfical, queftion was fcarcely of fufficient importance to caufe the multitude to rife, or at leaft to intereft them ftrongly in a quarrel for which they fas their land deprived of the hands deftined to its cultivation, their harrefts laid wafte, their fields covered with the dead bodies of their kindred, or ftained with their own blood. To thefe calamities, the work of the royal troops upon the coaft, were foo: added more infupportable ones in the heart of the country.

[ 127 ]

Never had the reftleffinefs of the courts of London and Verfailles difturbed the tranquillity of North America but both thefe powers brought fome of the migratory clans in this part of the new hemifphere to partake in their fanguinary ftrife. Inftructed by experience in the weight which thefe hordes could add to the fcale, the Englifh and the colonifts were equally refolved to employ them for their mutual deftruction.

$\left[\begin{array}{ll}128\end{array}\right]$

Carleton tried, firft, to arm thefe barbarous hands in Canada. "It is the dif" pute," faid they in anfiver to his folicitations, " of $a$ father with his children; " we do not think it right for us to enter " into this domeftic \{quabble."-_" But " if the rebels fhould come to attack this " province, would not you help us to " drive them back ?"-" Ever fince the " peace the hatchet of war has been bu"r ried forty fathoms deep."-" You " would certainly find it, if you were to " dig for it."-" The helve of it is rot" ten, and we cannot make any ufe of it." The United States were not more fortunate. "We have heard talk of fome " differences that have happened between "Old and New England (faid the tribe " of the Oneidas to their deputies) but

[ 129 ]

${ }^{6}$ we fhall never take a part in fuch atro" cious divifions. War between brethren " is a ftrange and a new thing in thefe re" gions. Our traditions have left us no " example of this nature. Supprefs your " mad hatred ; and may a benerolent fun ${ }^{6}$ difperfe the black vapour in which you "6 are involved!"

The Mafphies alone feemed to intereft themfelves in the caufe of the Americans. " There, (faid thefe good favages to them) "s there's fixtcen fhillings for you. 'Tis "s all that we have. We thought to have "6 bought fome rum with it; we:ll drink "water. We'll go a hunting. If any " beafts fall by our arrows, we'll fell their " fkins, and bring you the money."

But in time, the very active agents of Great-Britain fucceeded in conciliating to it many nations of thefe aborigines. Its interefts were preferred to thofe of its enemies, as well becaufe the remoter diftance had prevented the favages from having received fo many outrages from it as from their proud neighbours, as becaufe it could and would better pay the fervices which K might

[130]

might be rendered to its caufe. Under its banners, thefe allies, whofe characteriftic fiercenefs knew no reftraint, did a hundred times more damage to the colonifts fettled near the mountains, than had been fuffered, from the royal troops, by thofe of their fellow citizens whom a happier deftiny had fixed upon the confines of the ocean.

Thefe calamities attacked but a more or lefs confiderable number of the members of the United States, who foon after were all, collectively, afflicted by an inward hurt.

The metals, which, throughout the whole globe, reprefent all the objects of commerce, had, in this part of the newworld, never been abundant. The fmall quantity of them which had been feen there, difappeared even at the commencement of hoftilities. To thefe figns, univerfally agreed upon, were fubftituted figns peculiar to thefe provinces. Paper replaced filver and gold. In order to give fome dignity to the new pledge, it was adorned with emblems, which might continually remind the people of the greatnefs of their undertaking, of the ineftimable price of liberty, and of the neceffity of a perfeverance fuperior to all fifferings. The artifice did not fucceed. Thefe ideal riches were rejected. The more the multiplication of them was urged by want, the greater did their depreciation grow. The congrefs was indignant at the affronts given to its money, and declared all thofe to be traitors to their country who fhould not reccive it as they would have received gold itfelf.

$\left[\begin{array}{ll}\mathrm{I} 3 \mathrm{I}\end{array}\right]$

Did not this body know, that prepoffeffions are no more to be controled than feclings are? Did it not perceive, that in the prefent crifis every rational man would be afraid of expofing his fortune? Did it not fee, that at the beginning of a republic it permitted to itfelf the exercife of fuch acts of defpotifn as are unknown even in the countries which are moulded to, and become familiar with, fervitude and oppreffion? Could it pretend that it did not punifh a want of confidence with the pains which would have been fearcely merited by revolt and treafon? Of all K 2 this this was the congrefs well aware. But it had no choice of means. It's defpifed and defpicable fcraps of paper were actually thirty times below their original value, when more of them were ordered to be made. On the I 3 th of September, I779, there was of this paper money, amongft the public, to the amount of $2,35,544,155$. The ftate owed moreover $88,385,356$, without reckoning the particular debts of fingle provinces.

[ 132 ]

The people had no amends for this domeftic fourge, as it might be called, by an eafy communication with all the other parts of the world. Great Britain had intercepted their navigation with Europe, with the Weft Indies, with all the latitudes which their veffels covered. Then, they faid to the univerfe, " It is the Englifh " name which makes us odious; we fo" lemnly abjure it. All men are our " brethren. We are the friends of all 6 nations. Every flag may, without fear "s of infult, fhew itfelf upon our coafts, " frequent our ports. An invitation, fo " feducing in appearance, was not com-

6 plied

[ 133 ]

jlied with. Thofe ftates which are truly commercial ones, knowing that North America had been reduced to contract debts at the epoch even of her greateft profperity, thought wifely that in her prefent diftrefs fhe would be able to pay but very little for what might be carried to her. The French alone, who dare every thing, dared to brave the inconvenicnces of this new comection. But by the judicious vigilance of Admiral Lord Howe, the greateft part of the fhips which they fent out were taken before they arrived at the places of their deftination, and the others at their departure from the American coafts. Of many hundreds of veffels which failed from France, but twenty-five or thirty returned back to it, and eren thofe brought no profit, or very little, to their owners.

A multitude of privations, added to fo many other misfortunes, might make the Americans regret their former tranquillity, and incline them to an accommodation with England. In vain had the people been bound to the new government by the facrednefs of oaths and the influence of religion. In vain had endeavours been ufed to convince them that it was impoffible to treat fafely with a country in which one parliament might overturn what fhould have been eftablifhed by another. In vain had they been threatened with the eternal refentment of an exafperated and vindictive enemy. It was pofiible that thefe diftant troubles might not be balanced by the weight of prefent evils.

[ $\left.\begin{array}{lll}134\end{array}\right]$

So thought the Britifh miniftry, when they fent to the New-world public agents, authorized to offer every thing except independence to thefe very Americans, from whom they had two years before exacted an unconditional fubmiffion. It is not improbable but that by this plan of conciliation, a few months fooner, fome effect might have been produced. But at the period at which it was propofed by the Court of London, it was rejected with difdain, becaufe this meafure appeared but as an argument of fear and weaknefs. The people were already re-affured. The congrefs, the generals, the troops, the bold and fkilful men who in each colony had poffeffed themfelves of the authority ; every thing had recovered its firlt fpirit. This was the effect of a treaty of friendfhip and commerce between the United States and the Court of Verfailles, figned the 6th of February, 1778.

$\left[\begin{array}{ll}135\end{array}\right]$

If the Britifh miniftry had reflected up- France acon it, they would have comprehended that the inderenenhe fame delirium which drawing the the the fame delirium which was drawing them United to attack their colonies was reducing them meature octo the neceffity of declaring war in the warbetween fame inftant againft France. Then pre- this crown $\begin{gathered}\text { and that of }\end{gathered}$ vailed in the councils of this crown the England. circumfpection which muft always be infpired by a new reign. Then the finances were ftill in the confufion into which they had been plunged by a madnefs of twenty years. Then the decayed condition of the navy was fuch as filled every citizen with difquiet. Then Spain, already fatigued with her extravagant expedition of Algiers, found herfelf in embarrafiments which would not have permitted her to run to the fuccour of her ally. And then might England, without rafhnefs, have promifed

K 4
herfelf

[ 136 ]

herfelf fuccefs againft the moft powerfu of her enemics, and to intimidate America by victories gained or conquefts made near home. The importance that it was of, for this crown to take away from its rcbellious fubjects the only fupport of which they might be affured, would have diminifhed the indignation infpired by a violation of the moff folemn treaties.

George the Third faw nothing of all this. The obfcure fuccours which the Court of Verfailles fent to the provinces armed for the defence of their rights, did not open his eyes. The dock-yards of France were filling with fhipwrights. Her arfenals were filling with artillery. Scarcely was there room remaining in her magazines for more naval fores. Her ports prefented the moft menacing appearance ; and this ftrange blindnefs ftill continued. To awaken the Court of St. James's from its lethargy, it was neceffary that Lewis the Sixtecnth fhould fignify to it, on the $14^{\text {th }}$ of March, that he had acknowledged the independence of the United States.

This

[ 137 ]

This fignification was a declaration of war. It was impoffible that a nation, more accuftomed to give provocation than receive it, could patiently look on, whilft another nation was loofening it's fubjects from their bonds of allegiance, and raifing them up with much parade to the rank of fovereign powers. All Europe forefaw that two ftates, in rivalfhip for ages, were about to tinge the waters of the ocean with their blood, and again play that dreadful game, in which public profperities will never compenfate for particular difafters. They in whom ambition had not extinguifhed all benerolence for their fellow-creatures, deplored beforehand the calamities, which, in either hemifphere, were ready to fall upon the human race.

The bloody fcene, notwithftanding, did not open yet; and this delay gave credulity a ground of hope, that peace would ftill continue. It was not known that a fleet, which had failed from Toulon, was commiffioned to attack the Englifh in North America. It was not known that orders had been difpatched from London to drive the French from the Eaft Indies. Without being initiated in thofe myfteries of perfidy, which infidious politics are arrived at regarding as great itrokes of flate, judicious men fuppored that hoftilities muft be incritable, and on the point of taking place, even in our ocean. This event, which had been forefeen, was brought on by the fight of two frigates, on the 1yth of June, $177^{8 .}$

[ 138 ]

Here our taik becomes more and more difficult. Our fole object is to be ufeful, and to be true. Far be from us that fpirit of party which blinds and degrades thofe who are the conductors, and thofe who afpire to be the inftructors, of mankind. Our wifh is for our country; our homage is to juftice. We honour virtue, in whatever place, in whatever form, the is feen : the diftinctions of condition and of nation cannot eftrange us from her; and the man who is juft and magnanimous is our countryman over all the world. If in the different events which pafs under our eyes, we blame with boldnefs what appears to us blame-worthy, we feek not the vain and forry pleafure of cafting indifcreet reproach. But we are fpeaking to nations and to porterity. We ought faithfully to tranfmit to them what may be influential on the public good. We ought to give them the hiftory of errors, to teach them how they may be fhumed. Should we dare to be traiteroufly wanting to fo great a duty, we might, perhaps, flatter the generation which paffeth away; but truth and juftice, which are eternal, would impeach us to future generations, who would read us with contempt, and pronounce not our name but with difdain. In this long carcer we fhall be juft to thofe who fill exift, as we have been to thofe who exift no more. If, amongtt the men of power, there are any who are offended at this freedom, let us not fear to tell them, that we are but the organ of a fupreme tribunal, which reafon is crecting upon a bafis that camot be fhaken. There is no longer a government in Europe but fhould ftand in fear of its determinations. Public opinion, which is becoming more and more informed, and which nothing has power to arreft or awe, has its eyes open 11 pon upon nations and their courts. It penetrates into the cabinets where policy would lie hid. There it judges the depofitaries of power, their weakneffes and their paffions; and, by the empire of genius and knowledge, raifes itifelf, on all fides, above the minifters of kings, to incite or to reftrain them. Woe to thém who deipife or brave it ! This feeming courage is weaknefs in reality. Woe to them whofe talents cannot arm them with a confidence to fuftain its look! Let fuch, that they may once do juftice, at leaft to themfelves, lay down the burden too heavy for their feeble flhoulders. They will ceafe to expore themfelves and the nations they pretend to ferve.

[ 39 ]

[ 140 ]

France began the war with invaluable advantages. The time, the place, the circumftances; fhe had chofen all. It was not till after fle had, at leifure, made her preparations, till after fhe had increafed her power to the proper pitch, that fhe fhewed herelf upon the field of battle. She had to combat but an enemy who was humbled, humbled, weakened, and difcouraged by domettic feuds. The wifhes of other nations were with her, againft thofe imperious mafters, or, as they were called, thofe tyrants of the ocean.

$$
[141,]
$$

Events feemed to correfpond to the defire of Europe. The French officers, who had old humiliations to wipe away, performed brilliant actions, the remembrance of which will be of long duration. Great theoretic knowledge, and unfhaken courage, fupplied what might be wanting in then from practice and experience. All the fingle engagements, of hip to fhip, did them the higheft honour, and moft of them terminated to their advantage. The Britifh fleet ran fill greater danger than the ifolated veffe!'s. It was fo roughly treated as to have caufe to fear being wholly or partially deftrojed; had not the French fleet, by which it was reduced, off Uhhant, to this almoft defpairing ftate, been deftined, from timid orders, from odious intrigues, from the weaknefs of its admirals, or from all thefe motives together, to quit the fea and be the firft to make for port.

[ 142 ]

In the intoxication of this, perhaps, unexpected fuccefs, France feemed to lofe fight of her deareft interefts. Her principal object fhould have been to intercept the commerce of her enemies, cutting the double nerve of their ftrength; their feamen and their wealth, and fo fap, at once, the two foundations of Englifh greatnefs. Nothing was more eafy for a power prepared a long while for hoftilities, than to intercept fleets of merchantmen, quite unprepared, and very feebly convoyed. This was not done. The immenfe riches expected by Great Britain, from all parts of the globe, entered peaceably into her harbours, without fuffering the fmalleft diminution.

The commerce of France, on the contrary, was harraffed in both the hemi$f_{p}$ heres, and every where intercepted. Her colonies faw ravifhed from them, on their very coafts, fubfiftences, to welcome which they were reaching out their arms with all the eagernels of want; whilft the mothercountry was deprived of four millions fterling, arrived almoft in her fight. This reverfe was not without a caufe. Let us endeavour to difcover it.

[ 143 ]

The French navy had been a long time unfuccefsful ; and it was to the rice of its conftitution that fo many misfortunes had been afcribed. Miany attempts had been made to modify or change the regulations of it ; but thefe imnovations, good or bad, were aliways repelled with a more or lels ftrongly marked difdain. At length its admirals dictated themfelres, in 1776 , a difpofition, which rendering them abfolute mafters of the roads or anchoring-places, of the arfenals, of the dock-yards, and the magazines, deftroyed that mutual infpestorfhip, which Lewis the Fourteenth thought it was right he fhould eftablifh, between the military officers and thofe of the adminiftration. From that time there was no longer any refponfibility, regulation, or œconomy in the ports. Every thing there fell into diforder and confufion.

The

$$
\left[\begin{array}{lll}
& 144
\end{array}\right]
$$

The new plan had an influence that was ftill more unhappy. Till this period it was the miniftry who had directed the naval operations towards the end aimed at by their politics. This authority paffed, perhaps, almoft without being perceived, to thofe who were to execute thefe operations, which took infenfibly a tincture from their prejudices. Thefe prejudices inclined them to think, that it was not in heavily and laborioufly convoying the fhips of their nation, or in remaining out upon difficult cruizes, to furprize or deftroy thofe of the enemy's nation, that fame was to be acquired. This double duty, therefore, was entirely neglected, or very ill performed, in confequence of the opinion common at Breft, that fuch a fervice had nothing noble in it, and led not to any kind of glory.

It muft be confeffed, that this prejudice is a very odd one, and quite contrary to all the laws of fociety. What can be fuppofed to have been the defign of ftates in inflituting this military force deflined to foour the feas? Was it only to procure promotions for thofe who command or ferve ? Only to give them opportunities of exercifing a valour ufelefs to every body but themfelves? Only to fain red another element with bloody battles? No, undoubtedly. Flects of war upon the ocean, are what fortreffes and ramparts are for inhabitants of cities; what the national armies are for provinces expofed to incurfions of the foe. There are fome forts of property attached to the foil; there are others which are created, tranfported by commerce, and, as they may be called, wandering on the ocean. Both thefe forts of property want defenders. Warriors, that is your function. What would be faid, if the land-forces fhould refufe to protect the inhabitants of cities, the cultivaters of fields, and to drive back the fire threatened to the harveft? Naval officers, you think yourfelves debafed by convoying and protecting commerce. But if commerce is to be no more protected, what will become of the riches of the ftate, of which, without doubt, you expect a

[ 145 ]

$$
\left[\begin{array}{ll}
146
\end{array}\right]
$$

part, in recompence of your fervice? What will become of your own property, in the revenue of your land, which commerce and the circulation of wealth chiefly contribute to makc fruitul? You think yourfelves debafed. What, debafed in making yourflf ufeful to your commymen! And what are all the orders in the ftate, to whom govermment has committed any portion of the public power, but protectors and defenders of your countrymen and their wealth? Your poit is upon the ocean, as that of the magiftrate upon the bench, that of the foldier in the camp, and that of the monarch himfelf upon the throne, where he commands from a higher fation but to take a wider furvey, and comprize, at one view, all thafe whoftand in need of his protection and defence. Know that glory is to be glcaned in every field on which a fervice to your country can be performed. Know, that to preferve is more glorious, as well as more bleffed, than to deftroy. In ancient Rome there were alfo admirers of glory. Yct, there, the glory of having favel a fingle citizen, was preferred to the glory of having flain a hoft of foes. What, fee you not that in faving the commercial fhips, you fave the fortune of the fate? Yes, your valour is fplendid; it is known to Europe as well as to your country; but what boots it to your countrymen, that it has been difplayed upon occafions of eclat, that it has brought the fhip of your cnemy in tow, or blown its ruins wide upon the waves, if you have fuffered to perifh, or be taken, the fhips which bear your country's riches; if in the very port, which you trimphantly reenter, a thoufand defolate familics deplore their fortunes loft? On your landing, inftead of hearing the fhouts of viftory, you will be reccived with filence and dejection; and your exploits will be defined but to fwell the recital of a court-gazette, and thofe public papers, which, in amufing idleness, give glory but for a day, when that glory is not graven upon the hearts of your fellow-citizens, by the remembrance of real utility to the common good.

[ 147 ]

The maxims facred at Portfmouth were fery different. There was felt, there was

$$
\mathrm{L}_{2} \text { refnected. }
$$

[ 148 ]

refpected, the dignity of commorcc. There, it was both a duty and an honour to defend it ; and events have decided on which fide the naval officers had the juftert ideas of their function.

Great Britain had juft experienced a very humiliating reverie in the new world, and a more powerful enemy threatened her with greater difafters in the old. This alarming fituation filled all minds with doubtfulnefs and difturft. The national riches arrive. Thofe of the rival power add to the enormous mafs; and inftantly public credit is reanimated; hope fprings up again, and this people, who were contemptuoufly thought to be brought down, refume, and fuftain, their ufual prowefs and their ufual pride.

The ports of France, on the contrary, are filled with groans. A fhameful and ruinous inaction fucceeded to an activity which contributed to their fame and riches. The indignation of the merchants communicated itfelf to all the nation. The firit moments of fuccefs are moments of intoxication, in which faults feem to be juftificd as well as hid. But misfortune gives more feverity to judgement. The nation then obferves more nearly thole who govern, and loudly calls for an account of the employment of the power and authority which have been committed to them. The councils of Lewis the Sixteenth are reproached, for having wounded the majefty of the firft power on the glove, in difavowing, to the face of the univerfe, the fuccours which were fent continually to the Americans in a clandeftine manner. They are reproached, for having, by a minifterial intrigue, or, by the afcendancy of fome obfcure agents, engaged the nation in a difaftrous war, whilft they fhould have been occupied in patting the fprings of government again in order, in healing the tedious wounds of a reign, of which the latter half was divided between depredation and fhame, between the bafenefs of vice and the convulfions of defpotifm. They are reproached, for having provoked the conteft by infidious politics, for having defcended to wrap themfelves round with guile, in difcourfes unworthy of France; for having employed with England the lanI. 3 guage

[ 149 ]

$$
\left[\begin{array}{lll}
150
\end{array}\right]
$$

guage of a timid audacity, which feems todifown and contradiet, the projects which are formed, and the fentiments which are uppermoft, in the heart ; a language which can only debafe him from whom it proceeds, without deceiving him to whom it is addreffed; and, whilft it brings difhonour, can make that difhonour of no ufe either to the mininer or to the fate. How much nobler had it been to fay, with all the franknefs of dignity ; "Englifhmen, " you have abufed your viEtories. Now " is the moment for you to flhew juftice ; "6 or it fhall be that of vengeance. Europe " is weary of fuffering tyrants. She re" enters at length upon her rights. Hence" forward, equality or war. Chufe." It is thus that they would have been talked to by that Richelieu, whom every citizen, it is true, fhould hate, becaufe he was an inhuman butcher, and, that he might reign defpotic, murdered his enemies with the hangman's axe; but whom, as a minifter, the nation is bound to honour, as it was he who firft fhewed France her dignity, and gave her, amongft the fates of Europe,

$$
\left[\begin{array}{ll}
1_{5} 1
\end{array}\right]
$$

rope, the air which became her power. It is thus that they would have been talked to by that Lewis, who, for forty years together, knew how to be worthy of the age to which he gave a name, who mixed greatnefs with his very faults, who never, even in adverfity and abafement, degraded his people or himelf. Ah, for governing a great nation, a great character is requifite. There is no fitaefs for it in thofe minds which are indiferent and coid from levity, to which abfolute muthority is but as it were a kind of daft amufement, which carelefsly leare great interefts floating at the caprice of chance, and are more occupied in preferving than cmploying power. Why, it is afked again, why did men, who hold in their hands all the authority of the ftate, and have but to command in order to be obeyed, why did they fuffer themfelves to be prevented, in all feas, by an enemy whole conflitution muft of noceffity caure flownefs in puting their meafurcs in execution? Why did they, by an inconfulerate treaty, tie themelves down to conditions with the Congrefs, which they might L. 4 themfelves

$$
\left[\begin{array}{ll}
152
\end{array}\right]
$$

themfelves have held in dependence, by ample and regular fupplies? Why, in fhort, did they not ftrengthen and confirm the revolution, by keeping always, on the northern coafts of the new world, a fquadron which might protect the colonies, and, at the fame time, make our alliance to be refpected? But Europe, who has her eyes fixed upon us, fees a great defign, and no concerted meafures; fees, in our arienals and our ports, immenfe preparations, and no execution; fees menacing fleets fitted out, and the pompous expence of them rendered almoft ufelefs; fees fpirit and valour in fubalterns, irrefolution and timidity in chiefs ; fees whatever proclaims, on one hand, the ftrength and the awecommanding power of a great people, and, on the other, the flacknefs and weaknefs infeparable from its character and views. It is by this ftriking contradiction between our projects and their execution, between our means and their direction, that the genius of England, ftunned for a moment, has refumed his vigour ; and it is even now a problem for Europe

$\left[\begin{array}{ll}153\end{array}\right]$

Europe to refolve, if, in declaring for America, we have not ourfelves revived and advanced the Englifh power.

Such are the complaints with which all parts of the kingdom ring, and which we are not afraid to collect together here, and lay before the eyes of authority, if it deigns to read or hear them.

In fhort, philofophy, whofe firft fentiment is the defire to fee all governments juft and all people happy, in cafting her eyes upon this alliance of a monarchy with a people who are defending their liberty, is curious to know its motive. She fees at once, too clearly, that the happinefs of mankind has no part in it. She thinks that if the Court of Verfailles had been determined by the love of juftice, it would have fettled in the firft article of its agreement with America, that cill opprefed people bave the right of reffing their oppieflors. But this maxim, which forms one of the lass of England; which a king of FIungary was great enough, when he was afcending the throne, to make one of the conftitutions of the ftate; which was adopted adopted by one of the greateft princes who reigned over the world, Trajan, when he faid, before an afembly of the Roman people, to the fert officer of the empire, in prefenting him with a drawn fword, according to cuftom upon invefting him with his charge, Ufe it for me. if I continue jult; againh … ! :mme tyramical. This Fraviri is too foreign for our feeble and computed governments, in which the fufscring patiently is fo much become a duty, that the fufferer ought to deprecate a fenfation of his mifery, left it be punifhed as a crime.

[ 154 ]

But the moft bitter complaints are directed above all to Spain. She is blamed for her blindnefs, her wavering, her tardirefs, and fometimes even for her infidelity: 2 ath whith accufations are ill-founded.

Some politicians imagined, in feeing Fance engage berfelf without neceffity in a raval war, that this crown fuppofed itfelf powerful enough to divide the Britifh domain, withont sharing with an ally the honour of this important revolution. We fantil not examine whether the firit which

$$
\left[\begin{array}{ll}
155
\end{array}\right]
$$

then reigned in the cabinct of Verfailles authorifed this conjecture. It is now known that this crown, which from the very begimning of the troubles had fent fecret fuccour to the Amcricans, was watching for the propitious moment of declaring openly in their favour. The event of Sa ratoga appeared to it the moft favourable conjuncture for propofing to the Catholic king to make the caufe a common one. Whether it were that this prince might then judge the liberty of the United States to be contrary to his intereft; whether the refolution might appear to him to be precipitate; or whether, in fhort, other political objects might require all his attention, he did not agree to the propofal. From his character it was fuppofed that repeated folicitation would be ufelefs. After the firft experiment, he was fo little applied to about this great affair, that it was without his being apprifed of it that the Court of Verfailles caufed it to be fignified at St. James's that it had acknowledged the independence of the confederate provinces.

[ 156 ]

In the mean time the land and fea forces which Spain employed againft the Portuguefe in the Brazils were returned home. The rich fleet which fhe expected from Mexico was arrived in her ports. The treafures which came to her from Peru and from her other poffefions were fecure. She was free from all inquietude, and miftrefs of her motions, when the afpired to the glory of being a pacificator between the two hemifpheres. Her mediation was accepted, as well by France, whole bold attempts had not been attended with the happy confequences which the had promifed herfelf from them, as by England, who might fear the having an additional adverfary to contend with.
路 meideg france: fares
riec lat power. the great part he had to act. He awarded that, laying down their arms, each of the belligerant powers fhould be maintained in the territories which it hould occupy at the time of the convention; that a congrefs fhould be formed, in which the different pretenfions fhould be difcuffed; and that no frefh hoftilities fhould commence

[ 157 ]

'till after the expiration of a twelvemonth's notice.

This monarch was aware that this arrangement gave to Great Britain a facility of being reconciled with her colonies, or at leaft of making them purchafe, by great advantages to her commerce, the ports which fhe occupied in the midft of them. He was aware that it muft wound the dignity of the king his nephew, who had engaged to maintain the United States in the totality of their territory. But he would be juft; and without forgetting all perfonal confiderations one cannot be fo.

This plan of conciliation was difpleaing to Verfailles, whefe only confolation was miniftered by the hope that it would be rejeeted at London. 'This hope was not deceived. England could not refolve upon acknowledging the Americans to be really independant; though they were not to be called to the conferences which were to have taken place; though France could not negotiate for them; though their interefts were to have been raken care of folely by a mediator who was not bound to them by any treaty, and who, perhaps, at the bottom of his heart, was not defirous of their profperity; though her refufal threatened her with an enemy the more.

$\left[\begin{array}{ll}158\end{array}\right]$

It is in fuch a circumftance as this; it is in the time when noble pride elevates the foul fuperior to all terror; when nothing is feen more dreadful than the fhame of receiving the law, and when there is no doubt or hefitation which to chufe between ruin and difhonour; it is then, that the greatnefs of a ination is difplayed. I acknowledge however that men, accurtomed to judge of things by the event, call great and perilous refolutions, heroifm or madnefs, according to the good or bad fuccefs with which they have been attended. If then I fhould be afled, what is the name which fhall in years to come be given to the firmnefs, which was in this moment exhibited by the Englifh, I fhould anfwer that I do not know. But that which it deferves, I know. I know that the aunals of the world hold out to us but rarely, the augunt and majentic fpec-tacle of a nation, which chufes rather io renounce its duration than its glory.

[ 159 ]

The Britifh miniftry had no fooner given their determination, than the Court of Madrid efpoufed the quarrel of that of Verfailles, and confequently that of the Americans. Spain had then fixty-three mips of the line and fix on the ftocks. France had eighty of the line, and eight upon the flocks. The United States had but twelve frigates; but a great number of privateers.

To all this united force England had to oppofe but nincty-fire fhips of the line, with twenty-three upon the ftocks. The fixteen which were to be feen in her ports, over and above, were unfit for fervice, and had been converted into prifons or hofpitals. Inferior in inftuments of war, the was fill more fo in means of all forts for their employment. Wer domeftic differfions ftill weakened the refources which remained. It is the nature of governments truly free to be agitated during peace. It is by this inteftine morion that the fpirits preferve their energy and the continual remembrance

[ 160 ]

remembrance of the nation's rights. But in war, all ferments ought to ceafe, all hatreds to be extinguithed, all interefts to coalefce and be mutualiy fubfervient to the public good. It happened quite ctherwife, at this time, in the Britifh illes. Never were there more violent diffenfions. Never did contrary pretenfions fhew themfelves in any circumftance with lefs referve. The public good was by either faction audaciounly trodden under foot. Thofe houfes of parliament, in which the moft important queftions had, formerly been diffuffed with eloquence, with dignity, and with power, now rung but with the clamours of rage, but with the groffert infults, but with altercations as hurtful as they were indecent. The few true friends of the nation who were remaining called loudly for another Pitt, for the minifter who like him fhould have neither relations nor friends; but this extraordinary man did not appear. And indeed it was pretty generally imagined that this people would now give way, notwithftanding the high-firitednefs of its character, notwithftanding withfanding the experience of its admirals, notwithftanding the bravery of itg feanien, notwithftanding that energy which a frce nation mift acquire from vibrating with concuffion.

$[161]$

But the empire of chance is a very wide one. Who knows in favour of which fide the elements fhall declare? By a guf of wind, is a victory given or flatched away. The difcliarge of a gui-difcon= certs a flect by its admiral's death: Signals are not feen or fieard; are not cbeyed. Experience, valour, ikili, are thwarted by igiorance, by jealoufy, by treachery, by an affurance of impunity: A fog covers contending navies, and feparates or confoutinds them. A tempeft or a calm equally proferves, or equally deftroys. Forces are divided by the unequal celerity of chips. The propitious moment is miffect, by pufillanimity which lingers, or by rafbencfs which rufles on Plans fliall have beef formed with wifdom; but their fuccefs fhall fail for want of concert in the movements of execution:猪y an inconfiderate order of the court. M

$$
\left[\begin{array}{lll}
162 & ]
\end{array}\right.
$$

what might have proved a proud day, is decided to difhonour. Projects are changed by a minifter's difgrace or death. Is it pofible that a ftrict union fhould long fubfift amongt confederates of characters fo oppofite, as the hafty, light, difdainful Frenchman, the jealons, haughty, fly, flow, circumpective Spaniard, and the Americarr, who is fecretly fnatehing looks. at the mother-country, and would rejoice, were they compatible with his indepen dence, at the difafters of his allies? Will thefe nations long delay, whether they act feparately or conjointly, mutually to accufe, complain, and be embroiled? Ought not their greateft hope to be that multiplied ill-fuccefles may: do no more than replinge them into that humiliating fate from which they endeavoured to emerge, and firmly fix the trident in the hand of England; whillt a confiderable defeat or two would bring down this ambitious. people from cver ranking again amongtt the principal powers of the European. forld ?

Wha

[ 163 ]

Who fhall decide then, who can forefee, the event? France and Spain united have poweiful means to cmploy: England, the art of employing her's. France and Spain have their treafures; Engl?nd, a great nationial credit. On one fide, the multitude of men; on the other, the fuperiority in the art of working fhips, and, as it were, of fubjecting the fea in fighting. Here, impetuofity and ralour ; there, valout and experience. In one party, the activity which abfolute monarchy gives to defigns; in the other, the vigour and elafticity which liberty fupplies. There, lofles and grudges to revenge; here, their late glory, with the fovereignty of America, and of the ocean, to recover and preferve. The allied nations have the advantage with which the union of two vaft powers mult be attended, but the inconvenience likewife which muft refult from this very union, by the difficulty of harmony and concord both in their defigns, and in the execution of them by their tefpective forces; England is abandoned to herfelf, but having only her own forces to direct, fhe has the advantage of unity in defigns, and of a more fure and perhaps more ready difpofition in ideas: the can more eafily range her plans of defence and offence under a fingle view.

[164]

In order to weigh the matter with exactnefs, we fhould yet put into the fcales the different energy whicli may be communicated to the rival nations by a war, which is in a great many refpects but a war of kings and minifters, on one fide; but, on the other, a truly national war, in which the greateft interefts of England are concerned; that of a commerce which produces her riches, that of an empire and a glory on which her greatnefs refts.

In fhort, if we confider the fpirit of the French nation, oppofite to that of the nation with which it is at variance, we fhall fee that the ardour of the Frenchman is as quickly extinguifhed as it is inflamed; that he hopes every thing when he begins, that he defpairs of every thing as foon as an obftacle fhall retard him ; that, from his character, his arm muft be nerved by the enthufiafm of fuccefs, in order to reap more fuccers: that the Englifhman, on the contrary, lefs prefumptuous, notwithfanding his natural boldnefs, at the beginning, knows how, when occafions calls for it, to fruggle courageounly, to raife himfelf in proportion as the danger rifes, and to ga ther advantages even from difgrace: like the robuft oak to which Horace compares the Romans, which, mutilated by the axe, fprings afrefh under the ftrokes which are given it, and draws vigour and fipirit from its very loffes and its very wounds.

[ 165 ]

Hiftory fhews us likewife that few leagues have divided the fpoil of the nation againft which they have been formed. Athens rictorious over Perfia; Rome faved from Hannibal ; in modern times, Venice efeaped from the famous league of Cambray; and, even in our own days, Pruffia rendered by the genius of one man capable to cope with Europe, fhould furpend our judgment upon the iffue of the prefent war.

But let us fuppore that the houfe of Bourbon have the advantages with which it may have been flattered. What ought to be its conduct?

[166]

France is in all points of view the empire the moft ftrongly conftituted, of which any remembrance has been preferved in the annals of the world. Without being able to bear any comparifon with her, Spain is likewife a very powerful ftate, and her means of profperity are continually increafing. The moft important concern then of the houfe of Bourbon ought to be, to obtain pardon of its neighbours for the advantages which it has from nature, which it owes to art, or which have been beftowed on it by events. Should it endeavour to angment its fuperiority, the warm would become general, and it would be thought that an univerfal flavery was threatened. It is perhaps to be wondered at, that the other nations of Europe have not yet thwarted, it in its projects againft England. The refentment which the injuntice and the haughtinefs of this proud inland have every where infpired, muft be the caufe of this inaction. But hatred is filent when intereft appears. It is poffible that that Europe may think the weakening of Great Britain in the old and the new hemifphere contrary to its fafety; and that, after having enjoyed the humiliations and dangers of this lofty and tyranic power, the may at length take arms in its defence: Should it be fo, the Courts of Verfailles and Madrid would fee themfelves fallen from the hope which they have conceived of a decifive preponderance upon the globe: Thefe confiderations fhould determine them to haften their attacks, and not give time, for the forming of new difpofitions, to a prophetic or even a jealous policy. Abore all, let them ftop in time, and not fuffer an immoderate defire of humbling their common enemy to make them blind to their own interefts.

[ 187 ]

The United States have fhewn openly the project of drawing all North America to their league. Many meatures, that in particular of inviting the people of Canada to rebellion, have given caufe to beliere that this was likewife the wifh of France. Spain may be furpected to hase equally adopted this idea.

[ 168 ]

The conduct of the provinces which have fhaken off the yoke of Great Britain is fimple, and fuch as was to be expected. But would not their allies be wanting in forefight, if they fhould have really the fame fyftem?

The new hemifphere muft be detached one day from the old. This grand feiffure is prepared in Europe, by the collifion and fermentation of our opinions; by our being deprived of our rights, which conftituted our courage ; by the luxury of our courts and the mifery of our countries; by the hatred, the endlefs hatred, between men without heart, honour, or yigour, who poffefs all elfe, and rubuft men, and even virtuous men, who have nothing but life to lofe. It is prepared in America, by the increafe of population, of cultivation, of induftry, and of knowledge. Every thing forwards this rupture, as well the progress of evil in the old world, as in the new the progrefs of good.

But would it be right for Spain and France, whofe poffeffions in the new world are an incexhauftible fource of riches, would it

$\left[\begin{array}{ll}1.69\end{array}\right]$

it Le right for them to precipitate this rupture? Now this rupture is the thing that would precifely happen, were all the north of thofe regions fubjected to the fame laws, or bound together by a common interct.

No foonce would the liberty of this raft continent be eftablifhed, than it would become the afylum, of all the offscouring amongft us, of men of intriguing, feditious fpirits, blafted characters, or ruined fortunes. Culture; arts, commerce, would hare no charms for fuch refugees as thefe. They munt have a lefs laborious and more agitated life. This turn of mind, equally diftant from labour or repofe, would direct itfelf. towards conquefts; and a paffion which has fo many attractions would eafily captivate the firft colonifts, diverted by a long war from their accuftomed occupations. The new people would have compleated their preparations for invafion before the report of it had reached our climates. They would chufe their enemy, the field and the moment of their rictories. Their thunder would fail always upon feas without defence, or on coafts taken at unawares. In a little while the Southern provinces would become their prey, and fupply by the riches of their productions the mediocrity of thofe of the Northern. Perhaps the poffeffions of our abfolute monarchies might even be candidates for the honour of being admitted to a confederacy with afree people, or would detach themfelves from Europe in order to belong but to themfelves.

[ 170 ]

The part which the Courts of Madrid and Verfailles fhould take, if they are free to chufe, is to let two powers fubfift in North Ainerica, who may watch, refrain, and counterpoize each other. Then will ages roll away, before England and the republics formed at her expence can come together. This reciprocal diftruf will prohibit them from any diftant enterprize; and the eftablifhments, belonging to other nations, in the new world, will enjoy without difurbance that tranquillity, which, even down to our own times, has been fo often troubled.

[ 5 \% I ]

In all probab' ir income io it rierory
 fuitable even for the cums iemer pro rices themfelves. Their refpective humirs are not regulated. A great jealouly fubfifts between the countries to the northward and thofe to the fouthward, Political principles vary from one river to another. Greas animofities are obferved between the inhabitants of the fame town, between the members of the fame family. Each would throw off from himfelf the heavy burden of public expences and debts. A thoufand principles of divifion are generally fpringing in the bofom of the United States. When dangers are once at an end, how is the explofion of fo many difcontents to be retarded? how are fo many unfettled minds, and angered hearts, to be held attached to a common centre? Let the true friends of America reflect upon it, and they will find that the only means to prevent difturbances, amongft that people, is to leave remaining on their frontiers a powerful rival, always difpofed to profit by their diffenfions.

[ 172]

Monarchies thrive beft with peace and fecurity; inquietudes, and formidable encmies, make republics flourifh. Rome bad need of Carthage; and he who deftrojed the Roman liberty was neither Sylla, nor Cafar ; it was the firft Cato, when his nasrow and auftere politics took her rival away from Rome, by lighting, in the fenate, thofe torches which burnt Carthage to the ground. Even Venice, perhaps, would not have had her government, and her laws, thefe four hundred years, had the not had at her door powerful neighbours, who might become her enemies or her mafters.

Efinat idea forwid be formed of the thirteen united prorinces.

But, fuppofing them thus fituated, to what degree of happinefs, fplendour, and power, may the united provinces in time be raifed?

Here, in order to form a found judge ment, let us immediately begin with laying afide the intereft which all hearts, not excepting thofe of flaves, have taken in the generous efforts of a people who expored themfelves to the moft dreadful calamities to be free. The name of liberty is fo fiveet, that all they who fight for it are fure to intereft our fecret wifhes. Their caufe is that of the whole human race ; it becomes our own. We revenge ourfelves of our own oppreffors, by giving vent, at leuft, with liberty, to our hatred againft thofe oppreffors who cannot punifh it. At the found of breaking chains, it feems as if our own were about to become lighter ; and we think for fome moments that we breathe a purer air, in learning that fewer tyrants are to be connted in the world. Thefe great revolutions of liberty; moreover, admonifh defpots. They warn them not to truat to too long patience in the peo. ple, not to truft to impunity without end. This, when the laws of fociety exccute rengeance upon the crimes of private individuals, the good man hopes that the punifhment of the guilty will, by its terrible example, prevent the commifion of new crimes. Terror fometimes fupplics the place of juftice to the thief, and confcience to the affaffin. Such is the fource of the warm intereft we feel in all the wars of liberty. Such is that with which we have been infpired for the Americans. Our imaginations have boen inflamed in their favour. We feem to be prefent at, and to feel as they do, all their victories and their defeats. The fpirit of juftice, which is pleafed in compenfating, paft mifery by happinefs to come, is pleafed in thinking that this part of the new world cannot fail of beconing one of the moft flourifhing countries upon the globe. Nay, it has been even fuppofed, that there is caufe to fear left Europe fhould one day find her mafters in her children. Let us dare to ferm the torrent of public opinion, and that of public enthufiafint. Let us not be led aftray by imagination, that embellifher of ali things, nor by paffion, which loves to create illufions, and realizes all it hopes. Our duty is to combat every prejudice, thould it be even that which is moft. conformable to the wifhes of our heart. To be true; above all things, is our chief concern, and not to betray the pure and upright confcience which prefides over our writings, and dictates every judgement that we pafs. At this moment, perhaps, we flall not be believed: but a bold conjecture, which is verified at the end of many ages, does more honour to the hiftorian, than the recital of a long feries of facts which cannot be contefted; and I write not only for my contemporaries, who will but fome years furvive me. Yet a few revolutions of the fun, and they and I fhall be no more. But I deliver over my ideas to pofterity and to time. It is for them to judge me.

[ 173 ]

$\left[\begin{array}{ll}154\end{array}\right]$

$\left[\begin{array}{ll}175 & ]\end{array}\right.$

The fpace occupied by the thirteen republics, between the mountains and the ocean, is but of fixty-feven fea-leagues: but upon the coate their cxtent is, in a ftrait line, three hundred and forty-five.

In this region the lands are, almoft throughout, bad, or of a middling quality. Scarcely any thing but maize grows in the four moft northern colonies. The only refource of their inhabitants is fifhery of which the annual produet, in moneys. does not amount to above two hundred and. fixty or feventy thoufand pounds.

Corn fuftains principally the provinces of New York, Jerfey, and Pennfylvania. But the

$\left[\begin{array}{ll}175\end{array}\right]$

the foil there is fo rapidly become woric than it was, that an acre, which formerly yielded full fixty bufthels of wheat, now proditces but very rately aboive twerity.

Though the foil of Maryland and Virginia is much fuperior to all the reft, it cannot be faid to be velfy fruifful. The old plantations do not yield above a third of the toEacco which they formerly produced. It is not poffible to form new ones; and the cultivators have been obliged to turn their views towards other objects.
North Caroliina produces fome cori, bue of a quality fo inferior, that it is fold for five and twenty, or thirty per cent. lefs than the other, in alf the markets.

South Carolina and Georgia liave a per: fectly flat face of country, for the diftance of fifty miles from the fea-fide. The ex: ceffive raitis which fall there, finding no means of difcharge, form ritimerous marfhes or lakes, in which rice is cultivated, to the great detriment of the flaves and the freemen occupied in this labour. Oin the intermediate faces left by thefe multitudinous little feas, grows an infcrior kind of indigo, which mult have its place changed every year. Where the country rifes from the level, it is but with ungrateful fands or frightful rocks, interfperfed, from diftance to diftance, with paftures of the nature of ruff.

[ 177 ]

The Englifh govemment, feeing that North America could never enrich them by the productions proper to that country, thought of the powerful motive of premiums, for the creating in this part of the new world, of linen, wine, and filk. The poverty of the foil, which would not bear flax, obftructed the firft of thefe views; the badnefs of the climate, which would not agree with vines, oppofed the fuccefs of the fecond; and the want of hands permitted not the third to take place. The fociety eftablifhed at London, for the encouragement of arts, manufactures and commerce, was not more happy than the miniftry had been. It's premiums did not give birth to any one of the objects which it had propofed to the activity and induftry of thofecountries.

$[178]$

Great Britain was obliged to content herfelf with felling every year to thefe countries, merchandize to the amount of fomething more than two millions. The confumers of this merchandize delivered up to her, exclufively, their indigo, their iron, their tobacco, and their furs. They delivered up to her whatever money, and raw materials, the reft of the globe had given them for their wood, their corn, their fifh, their rice, and their falted provifions. Yei the balance was always fo much againft them, that, when the troubles began, the colonies owed from five to fix millions to the mother-country, and had no cafh in circulation.

Notwithftanding thefe difadvantages, there had been fuccefively formed, within the thirteen provinces, a population of two millions nine hundred eighty-one thoufand fix hundred and ieventy-eight perions, including four hundred thoufand negroes. Oppreffion and intolerance were continually driving thither new inhabitants. The war has now barred this refuge to the unhappy; but the peace will open it to them again;

[ 179 ]

When they will flock thither in greater numbers than ever. They who thail go with projects of culivation in li not have all the fatisfaction which they fow wate themfelves, becaufe ther will fund $h$ rond land, and even the middiing, all occupied; and there will be nothing to be offered them but barren fands, unhealthy marfines, or fteep mountains. Emigration will be more farourable to menufacturers and artits, tho' even they may, perhaps, gain nothing by their change of country and climate.

We camot determine, without raflnefs, what may one day be the population of the United States. Such a calculation, generally pretry difficult, becomes impracticable for a region where the land degenerates very rapidly, and where the expence of labour and improvement is not proportionably andwered by the reproduction. If ten millions of men ever find a certan fubfiftence in there provinces, it will be much. Exon then the exportation will be reducat to nothing, or next to bothing: but interior induftry will replace torign indutry. The country, within a $\mathrm{N}_{2}$ litte, litule, will be able to fuffice for itfelf, provided that the inhabitants know how to make themfelves happy by ceconomy and with mediocrity.

[ 180 ]

Ye people of North America, let the example of all the nations who have gone before you, and above all that of your mo-ther-country, ferve you for inftruction. Fear the affluence of gold, which brings with luxury the corruption of manners, the contempt of laws. Fear a too unequal diffribution of riches, which exhibits a fimall number of citizens in opulence, and a great multitude of citizens in extreme poverty; whence fipings the infolence of the former, and the debafement of the latter. Secure yourcelves againt the firit of conquef. The tranquillity of an empire diminifles in proportion to its cxtenfion. Have arms for your defence; have none for offince. Scek competency and hcalth in labour; profperity in the culture of lands, and the workhops of indufty; power in manners and virtue. Caufe arts and fciences, which diftinguifh the civilifed from the farage man, to flowifh and abouad.

[ ISI ]

Above all, watch carcfully over the education of your children. It is from public fchools, be affured, that come the wife magiftrates, the capable and courageous foldiers, the good fathers, the good hufbands, the good brothers, the good friends, the good men. Wherever the youth are feen depraved, the nation is on the decline. Let liberty have an immoveable foundation in the wifdom of your laws, and let it be the indeftructible cement to bind your provinces together. Eftablifh no legal preference amongft the different forms of worfhip. Superftition is innocent, wherever it is neither perfecuted nor protected; and may your duration, if it be poffible, equal the duration of the world!

$$
\begin{array}{lllll}
\mathrm{F} & \mathrm{I} & \mathrm{~N} & \mathrm{I} & \mathrm{~S} .
\end{array}
$$

BOOKS printed for Lockyer Davis, im

 Holborn.1. A Voyage to South America ; defcribing at large the Spanim citics, towns, and proviaces on that continent, with their hifory, natural, commercial, &ec. By George Juan and Ant. de Ulloa, F. R. S. &ec. &ic. ©e. 2 vols, thind edit. with conperplates. I2s. bound.
2. An Account of fome German Volcaros, and their Productions. With a new Hypothefis of the Prifmatical Batales, eflablifhed upon Fidets. Being an Iffing of Phyfical Geography for Philofophers and Miners. ByR. E. Ralpe. Price 3s. 6d. in boarcis.
3. Profeffor Ferben's Travels through Italy: in the Years 1771 and 17ヶ2. Defcribed in a Series of Letters to Baron Born, on the Natural Hittory, particularly the Mountains and Volcanos of that Country. Trantlated from the German by Mr. Rafpe; with explanatory Notes, and a Preface on the prefont State and future Improvement of Mineralogy. 5 s. in boards.
4. New Obfervations of Two Swedifh Gentemen, on Italy and its Inhabitants. Tranflated from the French of M. Grotley. 2 vols. $10 s$. bound.
5. Mr. Bareti's Travels in Spain and other Parts. 4 vols. il. 1s. bound.
6. Mr. Falle's Account of the Ifland of Jerfey. 6. . bound.
7. Voltaire's Hiftory of Ruffia, with maps. 2 vols. ios. bound.
8. Capt. Armfronu's Hiftory of the Inand of Minorca, natural, civit, commercial, &x. with copperplates. 5 s. bound.
9. Bibliotheca Biographica: or, Synopfis of Univerlal Biography, antient and modern, comaining the Lives of celebrated Perions of all Ages, Britilh and Foieign. By the Rev. Mr. Flayd. 3 rols. 18 . bound.
io. Travels

BOOKS PRINTED FOR L. DAVIS.

10. Travels through Afia, Syria, Palefline, Mount Sinai, &c. by the Hon. Mr. Van Egmond and Profefior Heyman, 2 vols. 8ro. with copper-plates. Ios. bound.
II. Father Charlevoix's Hittory of Paraguay. 2 vols. ros. bound.
11. The Beauties of England, comprehended in a Pocket Volume; giving a defcriptive View of the chief Villares, Market towns, and Cities; Antiquities, Houles, Parks, Plantaions, Scenes and Siiuations in England and Wales. Intended as a travolling Pocket Companion. 3s. 6d. bound.
12. Maxims and Moral Reffections. By the Duke de la Rochefoucault. "Till you come to know Mankind (fays Lord Chefterfield) I know nothing can bring you fo well acquainted with them as Rochefoucault's Maxims. I would advife yoll to look into them for fome Moments at leatt, every Day of your Life." Mr. De Voltaire, obferves that "Theie Maxims conributed more than any other to form the Tafte of the French Nation; and they are known by Heart." zs. 6d. in boards.
13. Abercrombie's Britifi Fruit Gardener ; and Art of Pruning : comprizing the mof approved Methods of planting and raiing every uffel Fruit-tree, and Fruit-bearing Shrub, whether for Walls, Efpaliers, Standards, Half-Standards, or Dwarfs. 3s. 6d. boards.

1 \%. Abercrombie's Complete Forcinga Gardener 3 or the Practice of Forcing Fruts, Flowers and Vegetables to early Maturity and Peifection, by the Neans of Artificial Heat, in the various Structures ufed for this Purpole. 2s. 6d, in boads.

Cotcaten-tentret: Whthacuta, of at einat ton a 8 .

